The Office of Transition Initiatives (OTI) addresses the opportunities and challenges facing conflict-prone countries and those making the transition from the initial crisis stage of a complex emergency (frequently addressed by the Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance) to the path of sustainable development. OTI collaborates closely with the Department of State, the National Security Council, the Department of Defense, and USAID's regional bureaus in the selection of high foreign policy priority countries for OTI's transition assistance and in the design and monitoring of OTI programs. OTI's efforts to advance peace and stability include support for: demobilization and re-integration of ex-combatants; community self-help programs that reduce tensions and promote grass-roots democratic media; and conflict resolution measures.

Excess property, most of it obtained from the Department of Defense, includes heavy construction equipment, vehicles, heavy machinery, electrical generating equipment, and medical equipment and supplies. The fund, authorized by section 635(m) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, finances on a reimbursable basis the costs associated with providing administrative support to other agencies under the International Cooperative Administrative Support Services (ICASS) program overseas. Under ICASS, each agency pays a proportional share of the cost of those services they have agreed to receive. Working through inter-agency councils at post, all agencies have a say in determining which services the USAID mission will provide, defining service standards, reviewing costs, and determining funding levels. The fund is also used for deposit of rebates from the use of Federal credit cards, the deposits then being made available for start-up costs at new ICASS service provider missions and for technical support to missions currently providing services.

In 2002, the Administration merged USAID's two credit programs as one consolidated Development Credit authority. This single program, which includes a consolidated credit administrative budget, allows USAID to use credit as a flexible development tool for a wide range of development purposes.

The Development Credit Authority (DCA) permits the Agency to substitute credit assistance (loans and loan guarantees) for grant assistance to achieve any of the economic development purposes authorized by the Congress in Part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended. Subject to limits in annual appropriations acts and the normal congressional notification processes, disciplined credit assistance under DCA is principally intended for use where a development activity is financially viable, where borrowers are creditworthy, and where there is true risk sharing with private lenders. DCA augments grant assistance by mobilizing private capital in developing countries for sustainable development projects. In 2003, the Administration plans to use remaining authority made available in 2002 and will require no additional transfer authority in the 2003 appropriation.

The Overseas Private Investment Corporation encourages the participation of United States private sector capital and skills in the economic and social development of developing countries and emerging market economies. Its primary credit program is investment financing through loans and guaranteed loans.

As required by the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, the Program Account records the subsidy costs associated with the direct loans obligated and loan guarantees committed in 1992 and beyond (including modifications of direct loans or loan guarantees that resulted from obligations or commitments in any year), as well as administrative expenses of this program. The subsidy amounts are estimated on a present value basis; the administrative expenses are estimated on a cash basis.

Established by the 1969 Foreign Assistance Act, the Inter-American Foundation (IAF) supports grassroots development initiatives in Latin America and the Caribbean with a direct impact on the lives and the capacity for self reliance of people at the lowest economic levels. In 2003, the IAF will continue its new strategic programming approaches that focus on: (1) building partnerships among grassroots organizations, non-governmental organizations, local governments, and private enterprises to foster social and economic development at the local level; and, (2) increasing the participation of U.S. corporate and national private business sector resources in grassroots development initiatives. This strategy entails the promotion of corporate and business social investment in Latin America and the Caribbean among the U.S. and local private business sector to address a host of social and economic issues that will improve the quality of life of the poor in the region. The IAF will continue to apply its system of measuring the results of its grants to improve Foundation decision-making and identify and disseminate good practice and lessons to new private sector contributors and development practitioners. Using results and evaluation information, the IAF will incorporate lessons learned into the IAF's strategic planning and grant decision-making processes. It will also disseminate the results assessment system and development information to new private sector contributors, to donors, and to grassroots practitioners. The IAF will continue to implement an integrated program management information system which will increase efficiency in its operations and facilitate grant monitoring and results reporting.

Development Grants.—This activity includes the cost of all grants made directly to local private, non-profit organizations working in partnerships with businesses and local authorities to carry out development projects in Latin America and the Caribbean. In 2003, the IAF plans to award approximately 50 new grants and 10 amendments in 10 countries.

Evaluations and Other Activities.—This activity funds grant results assessments by in-country specialists and evaluations from a sample of the grants supported by the IAF. This activity also funds the publications that convey the IAF's partnership, corporate social responsibility experiences, and lessons to businesses, development practitioners, members of partnerships, and other donors.

Program Management and Operation.—This activity includes Foundation expenses for salaries and benefits, travel, rent, service contracts, and other support costs.

The African Development Foundation (ADF), a public corporation, is the only agency of the U.S. Government that directly supports community-based initiatives to alleviate poverty and promote sustainable development in Africa. Through its grant program, ADF provides Africans with the resources necessary to identify and solve their own problems. ADF relies on participatory development approaches that strengthen local capacity, foster ownership of development projects, and promote self-help and empowerment.

In 2003, ADF will provide grants to recipients in fourteen African countries, either directly to grassroots groups or through non-governmental organizations. These grants will promote the following three strategic goals:

(1) Advance broad-based, sustainable development and empowerment of the poor in Africa.—ADF will promote micro- and small-enterprise development to generate income and employment. ADF will improve community-based, natural resources management for sustainable, rural development. ADF will increase participation of African businesses and producer groups in trade and investment relationships with the U.S. and within Africa. ADF will support community-based HIV/AIDS prevention and mitigation.

(2) Expand local capacity to promote and support grassroots, participatory development.—ADF will build self-supporting, sustainable, local community development agencies that provide technical assistance and support to grassroots groups. ADF will develop and replicate new models for community reinvestment. ADF will continue to leverage additional funding through strategic partnerships with national and local governments, other donor agencies, and the local private sector. ADF will encourage African governments and other donors to increase utilization of participatory development “best practices”.

(3) Enhance American assistance and strengthen U.S. relations with Africa.—ADF will seek to leverage resources for grassroots development through strategic partnerships with the U.S. private sector and other U.S. Government agencies. ADF will work toward improving program and policy coordination with U.S. foreign assistance and foreign policy agencies.

As part of a general increase in IMF quota resources, on November 17, 1998, the United States consented to an increase in its quota to SDR 37,149.3 million (about $52 billion at that time). The increase in the U.S. quota involves no net budget outlays. Similarly, use by the IMF of the quota commitment does not result in net budget outlays because the United States receives an increase in its international monetary reserves corresponding to any transfer of dollars under the U.S. quota subscription. The United States can use these interest-bearing reserves to meet a balance of payments financing need.

The General Arrangements to Borrow (GAB) were established in 1962 by 10 industrial countries, including the United States, as a means of supplementing the IMF's resources when needed to forestall or cope with an impairment of the international monetary system. GAB members agreed in early 1983 to increase their financial commitments to the GAB from approximately SDR 6.3 billion to SDR 17 billion, with the U.S. share rising from $2.0 billion to approximately $6.4 billion.

In January 1997, the Executive Board of the IMF approved the creation of the New Arrangements to Borrow (NAB) to further supplement resources available to the IMF to forestall or cope with an impairment of the international monetary system or to deal with an exceptional situation that poses a threat to the stability of the system. The NAB became effective on November 17, 1998. Twenty-five countries and institutions participate in the NAB through a set of credit arrangements with the IMF totaling SDR 34 billion (about $48 billion on the date of establishment), of which the U.S. share is approximately SDR 6.7 billion (about $8.7 billion at end-September 2001). Although the GAB continues to exist, the sum of loans advanced under the NAB and GAB cannot exceed SDR 34 billion. The sum of U.S. loans advanced under both arrangements cannot exceed the U.S. share of the NAB.

Financing extended by the United States under the GAB and NAB does not result in any net budget outlays because such financing results in an equivalent increase in U.S. international reserve assets in the form of a claim on the IMF.

During 1998 (July), the IMF made one call on GAB participants in support of an assistance program for Russia, of which the U.S. share was approximately $483 million. On December 15, 1998, the IMF made a call on NAB participants in support of an assistance program for Brazil, of which the U.S. share was approximately $860 million. The GAB and NAB loans were paid back in full on March 11, 1999. Since 1999, no calls were made on GAB or NAB participants, and no loans were outstanding at the end of the fiscal year.

On November 22, 1999, the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility (ESAF) was replaced by Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility (PRGF). Like the ESAF, the PRGF provides financing on concessional terms to poor countries with protracted balance of payments problems. As its name suggests, however, the PRGF aims to make poverty reduction efforts among low-income member countries of the IMF a key and more explicit element of a growth-oriented economic strategy. Other defining features of the new PRGF approach include: (1) reliance on a comprehensive poverty reduction strategy to be prepared by the national authorities of the borrowing country in consultation with the public and civil society groups (this strategy will serve as a point of reference and guide for both IMF and World Bank concessional lending activities in a particular country); (2) closer cooperation between staffs of the IMF and World Bank; (3) stronger linkage between macroeconomics policies, on the one hand, and poverty reduction and growth objectives on the other; and (4) greater emphasis on good governance.

Certain terms and conditions that applied to ESAF continue to apply to the PRGF. For example, the same set of countries that were eligible for ESAF are also eligible for the new facility. Commitments of IMF resources continue to be based on a three-year program incorporating performance criteria and periodic reviews of progress. Disbursement of financing is semiannual (or quarterly in select cases), the interest rate is 0.5 percent, and loans will mature in 5½–10 years.

Like the ESAF, the PRGF advances critical U.S. interests by promoting economic and financial conditions which foster growth, stability, and the development of more open and accountable democratic institutions.

Financing for the PRGF, as for the ESAF, is provided by members of the IMF through loans to a trust account (formerly the ESAF Trust, now the PRGF Trust), or through contributions to an interest subsidy account.

This appropriation provides funding for Human Space Flight (HSF) activities, and for safety, mission assurance and engineering activities supporting the Agency. The HSF activities include development and operations of the Space Station and operation of the Space Shuttle. This includes high priority investments to improve the safety of the Space Shuttle, and required construction projects in direct support of Space Station and Space Shuttle programs. This appropriation also provides for: salaries and related expenses; design, repair, rehabilitation, and modification of facilities and construction of new facilities; maintenance, and operation of facilities; and other operations activities supporting human space flight programs; and space operations, safety, mission assurance and engineering activities that support the Agency.

In 2001, the HSF account provided only for the direct funding of human space flight activities; space operations services had been funded within the Science, Aeronautics and Technology (SAT) account; and safety, mission assurance and engineering had been funded within the Mission Support account. Since 2002, other than direct costs (which includes Research and Program Management and non-programmatic Construction of Facilities) are allocated to either the HSF or the SAT account based on the number of full time equivalent people.

Space Station.—The International Space Station (ISS) is a complex of research laboratories in low Earth orbit in which American, Russian, Canadian, European, and Japanese astronauts are conducting unique scientific and technological investigations in a microgravity environment. The goal of the Station is to support scientific research and other activities requiring the unique attributes of humans in space and establish a permanent human presence in Earth orbit. The President's 2003 Budget request provides funding for continued development of the vehicle and for operations in support of continued assembly, logistics resupply, crew exchange, research operations and other utilization. With nine assembly missions successfully completed, the budget includes funding to keep subsequent assembly missions on schedule through U.S. Core Complete (Flight 10A), currently planned for calendar year 2004, to support early research commensurate with the build-up of on-orbit utilization capabilities and resources.

In early calendar year 2001, NASA launched the U.S. Laboratory and the first set of research equipment necessary for conducting experiments on the Space Station. Subsequent flights enabled the installation of the Canadian robotic arm, additional research equipment for the U.S. Laboratory, installation of the Russian docking compartment, and transport of the 3rd and 4th crew expeditions. By mid-calendar year 2001, the U.S. Airlock had been installed, allowing spacewalks to be conducted without the Space Shuttle present, and marking completion of Phase 2 of the Space Station assembly. The first utilization flight in December 2001 greatly expanded the number of research payloads on-orbit, and raised the number of research investigations initiated to over 40. Crew training, payload processing, hardware element processing, and mission operations were supported without major ground anomalies, and all but two on-orbit subsystems performed above predicted levels, resulting in a lower than expected maintenance workload. This lower maintenance workload, coupled with the commitment of the expedition crews to dedicate time for conducting research experiments, resulted in research activities that exceeded expectations. NASA will seek to exceed expectations for research productivity by achieving astronaut time dedicated to research in excess of the planned 20 hours per week. During 2002, three of the major truss elements constituting the power block will be deployed to orbit, Expeditions 5 and 6 will be deployed, and a second utilization flight will expand science capabilities even further. In calendar year 2003, activation of the thermal system will be completed, two of the three remaining solar array modules will be deployed, and both the S6 truss and Node 2, the final components of the U.S. Core Complete, should be delivered to NASA for final integration and pre-flight test and checkout to support planned launches in calendar year 2004.

As required by both the NASA Authorization Act (PL 106–391) and the 2002 VA/HUD Appropriations Act (P.L. 107–73), the ISS research budget is transferred to the Biological and Physical Research Enterprise in 2002. The remaining ISS budget supports completion of the U.S. Core Complete and allows the program to press ahead with the integration of the partners' research modules. A NASA cost estimate, and an independent cost estimate (ICE) of the cost to assemble and operate the U.S. Core Complete will be completed by September 2002. The 2002 appropriation directed a general reduction in the station budget of $75M, which eliminated reserves fenced for guaranteed carryover into 2003. The appropriation also earmarked $40M for X–38 efforts that was originally planned to cover X–38 plus continued work on Node 3 and the advanced environmental control system. NASA plans to fund the Node 3 and environmental control work into the 2nd quarter of 2002, when a decision will be made to continue those efforts or to cancel them.

Consistent with the recommendations in the ISS Management and Cost Evaluation (IMCE) Task Force, and direction from the Administration, NASA will develop a Cost Analysis Requirements Document (CARD) to support cost estimates of the U.S. Core Complete baseline. NASA will also develop an integrated management action plan based on recommendations of the IMCE Task Force, and begin implementation of those actions. NASA will also report to the Administration and to Congress its plans for a non-governmental organization (NGO) for ISS research, and the results of discussions with the International Partners on ways to increase on-orbit resources for station research, in particular innovative methods for increasing crew availability. The ISS Program is pressing ahead with final flight hardware deliveries, and completion of the current prime contract in December 2003. Requirements for follow-on support are being reviewed and estimated, and a plan to competitively award contracts for the station's operations phase will be released this Spring.

Payload and Expendable Launch Vehicle (ELV) Support.—The Payload Carriers and Support budget provides technical expertise, facilities, flight carrier hardware and capabilities necessary to provide end-to-end servicing of multiple payloads to be flown aboard the Space Shuttle. During 2001, six pallets were used in Space Shuttle missions. In 2002 and 2003, over 20 major and secondary payloads will be supported, including major hardware for International Space Station assembly and operations.

The ELV Mission Support budget provides funds for technical and management insight of commercial launch services, including advanced mission design/analysis and leading-edge integration services, which are provided for the full range of NASA missions under consideration for launch on ELVs. During 2001, eight ELV missions were launched. Integration and technical management of 11 launches, including one secondary, are planned in 2002. In 2003, support for ten launches, including one secondary, is planned.

Investments and Support.—NASA's rocket propulsion test project will ensure that unique capabilities are properly managed and maintained in world-class condition. The project will significantly enhance NASA's ability to properly manage rocket testing activities and infrastructure across all four participating NASA centers. Engineering and technical base (ETB) activity will continue to: support the institutional capability in the operation of space flight laboratories, technical facilities, and testbeds; conduct independent safety, and reliability assessments; and stimulate science and technical competence in the United States. Funding for other direct costs associated with Human Space Flight, which were funded in the Mission Support account prior to 2002, are also funded within investments and support. This includes research and program management costs and non-programmatic construction of facilities costs.

Space Shuttle.—The Space Shuttle is a partially reusable space vehicle that provides several unique capabilities to the United States space program. These include retrieving payloads from orbit for reuse, servicing and repairing satellites in space, safely transporting humans to and from space, launching ISS components and providing an assembly platform in space, and operating and returning space laboratories.

In 2001, the Space Shuttle launched seven flights, all of which were ISS assembly and servicing missions. Seven flights are planned during 2002 including a dedicated microgravity research flight and another HST Servicing Mission (HST-3B) and five ISS assembly and servicing missions. In 2003, four flights are planned, all of which are ISS assembly and servicing missions. In support of the research objectives of the Space Station, the Space Shuttle will commit a minimum of five powered mid-deck lockers on each mission to deliver necessary research equipment and specimens.

NASA will aggressively pursue Space Shuttle competitive sourcing as an important step in transitioning NASA from infrastructure ownership and operation to purchasing space transportation services where possible. NASA will seek industry comment on its plans early this year, leading to release of a solicitation for competitive sourcing. NASA will prepare a Cost Analysis Requirements Document (CARD) to support NASA and independent cost estimates of Space Shuttle operations and safety investments, similar to estimates being done for the Space Station. These estimates, to be completed by September, 2002, will provide an important baseline from which to assess competitive sourcing options.

The President's 2003 Budget supports key Space Shuttle safety investments as part of NASA's Integrated Space Transportation Plan. NASA will seek to accelerate the implementation of safety investments, to begin achieving safety gains in Shuttle operations as quickly as possible. The President's 2003 Budget also supports investments in the Space Shuttle infrastructure, as necessary to address safety issues and critical repair and revitalization activities.

Space Communications and Data Systems.—The program goal is to support NASA's Enterprises and external customers with Space Communications and Data System (SCDS) services that are responsive to customer needs. Additionally, the program performs infrastructure upgrades and replenishment efforts necessary to maintain the service capabilities that satisfy the approved mission model. The program conducts technology and standards infusion efforts to provide more efficient and effective services. The Space Communications Office at Headquarters manages and directs an integrated Agency-wide Space Communications and Data Systems program.

Beginning in 2002, a decentralized management process has been implemented that involves transferring most management and budget responsibilities previously performed by the Space Operations Management Office to the appropriate Enterprises. Beginning in 2003, the Deep Space Network, Ground Network and Western Aeronautical Test Range will be managed by NASA's Enterprises. The Office of Space Flight will continue to perform overall program integration, including the management of Consolidated Space Operations Contract, which is now in its fourth year of providing data services to both NASA and non-NASA customers.

The TDRS-8 spacecraft, which completed on-orbit checkout in September 2000, is working well and meets all user service telecommunications performance requirements except for a Multiple Access (MA) performance anomaly. Modifications to the TDRS-I and TDRS-J spacecraft flight hardware and test program as a result of the MA investigation have been implemented. TDRS-I launch is now planned for February 2002. The launch of TDRS-J is slated for October 2002.

Safety, Mission Assurance and Engineering.—The Safety and Mission Assurance program invests in the safety and success of NASA missions by assuring that sound and robust policies, processes, and tools for safety, reliability, quality assurance, and engineering disciplines are in place and applied throughout NASA. The program also examines long-term technology requirements for NASA's strategic objectives. The Engineering program, managed by the Office of the Chief Engineer (OCE), oversees the conduct and improvement of NASA's engineering practice and independently evaluates ongoing programs, proposed concepts, and options for new programs. The OCE establishes policies, standards, guidance, and support for improving NASA engineering practices and technical capabilities, and manages the NASA Electronics Parts and Packaging Program, which supports evaluation and infusion of advanced electronic parts and packaging technology into NASA programs.

This appropriation provides for the Science, Aeronautics and Technology (SAT) supporting the Agency. The SAT activities include space science, biological and physical research including research for the International Space Station, earth science, aerospace technology, and academic programs. This appropriation also provides for salaries and related expenses; design, repair, rehabilitation, and modification of facilities and construction of new facilities; maintenance and operation of facilities; and other operations activities supporting science, aeronautics, and technology programs.

In 2001, the SAT account provided only for the direct funding of science, aeronautics and technology activities, and included funding for space operations services which are now funded within the Human Space Flight (HSF) account. Since 2002, other direct costs (which include Research and Program Management and non-programmatic Construction of Facilities) are allocated to either the HSF or the SAT account based on the number of full time equivalent personnel.

Performance Objectives

Space Science.—The Space Science program seeks to answer fundamental questions concerning: the galaxy and the universe; the connection between the Sun, Earth and heliosphere; the origin and evolution of planetary systems; and the origin and distribution of life in the universe. The Space Science program is comprised of many research and development activities, including flight missions, major space-based facilities, technology and mission development programs, and research and data analysis.

In 2001, the Space Science program produced many notable scientific results: The Hubble Space Telescope discovered a supernova blast that occurred very early in the life of the Universe, bolstering the case for the existence of a mysterious form of “dark energy” pervading the Universe. The concept of dark energy, which pushes galaxies away from each other at an ever-increasing speed, was first proposed, then discarded, by Albert Einstein early in the last century. The Hubble discovery also reinforces the startling idea that the expansion of the universe only recently began speeding up.

The Chandra X-ray Observatory enhanced our understanding of black holes on many fronts. Chandra took the deepest X-ray images ever and found the early Universe teeming with black holes, probed the theoretical edge of a black hole known as the event horizon, and captured the first X-ray flare ever seen from the supermassive black hole at the center of our own Milky Way galaxy.

Detailed scientific analysis of high-resolution images obtained by the BOOMERANG (Balloon Observations of Millimetric Extragalactic Radiation and Geophysics) mission provided the most precise measurements to date of several of the key characteristics cosmologists use to describe the Universe. These images were the first to bring the cosmic microwave background (the radiation remaining from the “big bang” that created the Universe) into sharp focus.

In addition to these discoveries that have enhanced our understanding of the origin, evolution, and structure of the Universe, many discoveries in 2001 related to the rapidly growing field of extrasolar planet (planets outside our Solar System) detection. NASA and National Science Foundation-funded astronomers discovered eight new extrasolar planets, bringing the total number of extrasolar planet detections to about eighty. Observations from the Submillimeter Wave Astronomy Satellite (SWAS) provided the first evidence that extrasolar planetary systems contain water, a molecule that is an essential ingredient for known forms of life. Also in this field, astronomers using the Hubble Space Telescope have made the first detection and chemical analysis of the atmosphere of a planet outside our Solar System.

Within our Solar System, NASA spacecraft made many stunning achievements in 2001. In a risky flyby, the Deep Space-1 spacecraft successfully navigated past comet Borrelly, giving researchers the best look ever inside a comet's glowing core of icy dust and gas. Deep Space-1 passed just 2,200 kilometers (1,400 miles) from the rocky, icy nucleus of the 10 kilometer-long (more than 6 mile-long) comet. The NEAR (Near Earth Asteroid Rendezvous) Shoemaker spacecraft achieved the first soft landing on an asteroid. The landing was the culmination of a year-long orbital mission at the asteroid Eros during which the mission returned enormous quantities of scientific data and images.

A pair of spacecraft, the Mars Global Surveyor and the Hubble Space Telescope, provided astronomers with a ringside seat to the biggest global dust storm seen on Mars in several decades. The Martian dust storm, larger by far than any seen on Earth, raised a cloud of dust that engulfed the entire planet for several months. The sun-warmed dust raised Martian atmospheric temperatures by 80 degrees Fahrenheit while the shaded Martian surface chilled precipitously. Also in calendar year 2001, the Mars Odyssey 2001 spacecraft successfully achieved orbit around Mars following a six-month, 286-million mile journey. Following aerobraking operations, this spacecraft will be placed in its science-mapping orbit in early calendar year 2002 and will characterize composition of the Martian surface at unprecedented levels of detail.

In the field of Sun-Earth Connections, where we seek to develop a scientific understanding of the physical interactions in the Sun-Earth system, there were several important scientific accomplishments in calendar year 2001. The Solar and Heliospheric Observatory (SOHO) observed the largest sunspot in ten years, with a surface area equivalent to thirteen Earths. This area proved to be a prolific source of stormy solar activity, hurling clouds of electrified gas (known as Coronal Mass Ejections, or CMEs) towards Earth. Other studies conducted by the SOHO spacecraft have provided the first clear picture of what lies beneath sunspots, peering inside the Sun to see swirling flows of electrified gas that create the self-reinforcing cycle that holds a sunspot together.

The calendar year was capped by the successful launch of the TIMED (Thermosphere, Ionosphere, Mesosphere Energetics and Dynamics) mission on December 7, 2001. This is the first mission in the Solar Terrestrial Probes program. It will study a region of the Earth's atmosphere that has never been the subject of a comprehensive, long-term scientific investigation.

The NASA budget request for 2003 features two very significant changes from the previous baseline program: a reformulated planetary program and the inclusion of a nuclear power and propulsion program. In the field of planetary exploration, the 2003 Budget takes a fundamentally different approach from previous years. Given cost growth and schedule delays, all funding for the Pluto-Kuiper Belt mission and the Europa Orbiter mission has been eliminated in 2003 and subsequent years. These missions will be replaced by a revamped planetary program that will incorporate the following principles: clear science priorities that support key goals in understanding the potential existence of life beyond Earth and the origins of life; open competition and rigorous reviews of cost, schedule, and risk to minimize future overruns and delays per the highly successful Discovery Program; and an architectural approach that balances science return in this decade with investments in high-leverage technologies that will enable faster and more frequent missions with greater science return in the next decade. It is envisioned that the new planetary program will be structured and managed along the lines of the highly successful Discovery program. A key element of this new program will be the development and incorporation of nuclear power and propulsion technologies. Building upon ongoing NASA investments in advanced electric propulsion and instrument and electronics miniaturization, investments in nuclear power and nuclear-electric propulsion technologies that will enable much faster and more frequent planetary investigations with greater science capabilities. These investments will allow NASA to undertake fundamentally new approaches to planetary exploration. In the next decade, nuclear-electric propulsion technology will enable affordable planetary missions that: can reach targets in half the time it would take using today's propulsion systems; are not limited by today's power and mass constraints; and can conduct long-term observations of multiple targets.

Nuclear power technology will also be incorporated into the Mars Exploration Program, specifically in the Mars Smart Lander/Mobile Laboratory mission. This mission will now be launched in calendar year 2009 to allow the incorporation of nuclear power, instead of calendar year 2007 as previously planned. By using nuclear power, the time during which the Mars Mobile Laboratory can conduct science operations will be extended from several months to several years. The nearer-term missions in the Mars Exploration Program remain essentially unchanged. In May and June of 2003, two highly capable surface rovers will be launched to Mars, with landings on the surface expected in April and May of 2004. The Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter (MRO) will be launched in calendar year 2005; this powerful scientific orbiter will focus on analyzing the surface at unprecedented levels of detail to follow tantalizing hints of water detected in images from the Mars Global Surveyor spacecraft. MRO will measure thousands of Martian landscapes at 20- to 30-centimeter (8- to 12-inch) resolution. It will be followed by a competitively selected Mars Scout mission in calendar year 2007 and the Smart Lander/Mobile Laboratory in calendar year 2009. This robust program of orbiters, landers, and rovers is poised to unravel the secrets of the red planet's past environments, the history of its rocks, the many roles of water, and, possibly, evidence of past or present life.

This Budget supports the completion of development of many significant missions, including Gravity Probe-B (GP-B), the Space Infrared Telescope Facility (SIRTF), and the Stratospheric Observatory For Infrared Astronomy (SOFIA). GP-B, which will verify a key aspect of Einstein's theory of general relativity, will be launched in October 2002. SIRTF, the fourth and final of the Great Observatories, is scheduled for launch in 2003. SOFIA development activities will continue, with the aircraft door and the telescope to be installed and tested in 2003. Development activities supporting the Solar Terrestrial Relations Observatory (STEREO), the Gammaray Large Area Space Telescope (GLAST), the final Hubble Space Telescope servicing mission, as well as several key missions in the payloads program such as Solar-B and Herschel, will also continue in 2003.

In the Explorer program, the Microwave Anisotropy Probe successfully launched on June 30, 2001, and development of Swift, a multi-wavelength observatory for gammaray burst astronomy, remains on schedule for a September, 2003 launch. Another MIDEX mission, the Full-sky Astrometric Mapping Explorer (FAME), did not pass confirmation review due to cost increases and was not approved for full-scale development. Selection of the MIDEX-5 and MIDEX-6 missions will occur in 2002, and an Announcement of Opportunity for MIDEX-7 and MIDEX-8 will be released in 2003. In the Small-class (SMEX) mission series, three NASA missions and two non-NASA Missions of Opportunity are supported. The NASA missions include the Galaxy Evolution Explorer (GALEX), Two Wide-Angle Neutral Atom Spectrometers (TWINS), and the High Energy Solar Spectroscopic Imager (HESSI). The Missions of Opportunity are the Coupled Ion Neutral Dynamics Investigation (CINDI; a cooperative mission with the Air Force), and ASTRO E-2, an X-ray astronomy mission (in cooperation with Japan). ASTRO E-2 is a rebuild of ASTRO E, which was lost due to a failure of the Japanese launch vehicle in February, 2000.

In the Discovery program, the Genesis mission was launched on August 8, 2001; it has begun collecting samples of charged particles from the solar wind, and it will return these samples to Earth for analysis in calendar year 2004. Development activities continue on three other Discovery missions. The Comet Nucleus Tour (CONTOUR) will be launched in July 2002, and it will encounter two comets: comet Encke in calendar year 2003, and comet Schwassman Wachman-3 in calendar year 2006. The Mercury Surface, Space Environment, Geochemistry and Ranging (MESSENGER) mission to orbit Mercury, and the Deep Impact mission to fly by and fire an impactor into comet Temple-1, are both scheduled to launch in early calendar year 2004.

The New Millennium program is providing flight demonstrations of critical new technologies that will reduce the mass and cost of future science and spacecraft subsystems, while maintaining or improving mission capabilities. In calendar year 2003, the Nanosat Constellation Trailblazer (Space Technology-5, or ST-5) will undergo spacecraft and instrument integration and test in preparation for launch in calendar year 2004. Also in calendar year 2003, the Critical Design Review for ST-6 will be conducted, as will the Confirmation Review for ST-7, and the initial confirmation for ST-8.

The President's 2003 Budget also provides funding for focused technology programs in each of the four major Space Science themes: the Astronomical Search for Origins, Structure and Evolution of the Universe, Solar System Exploration, and Sun-Earth Connections, which includes both the Living With A Star Program and the Solar Terrestrial Probes Program. These funds provide for early technology development in support of strategic missions such as the Next Generation Space Telescope and the Space Interferometry Mission. The goal is to retire technology risk early in a mission's life-cycle, before proceeding to full-scale development. Funds are also provided to continue on-going operations of approximately thirty spacecraft, and to conduct robust research and analysis, data analysis, and suborbital research campaigns.

Biological and Physical Research.—The Biological and Physical Research Enterprise (BPRES) seeks to exploit the rich opportunities of space flight for fundamental research in the biological and physical sciences, as well as in commercial development of space, and conducts research to enable efficient and effective systems for protecting and sustaining humans in space. BPRES seeks to achieve advances in biological and physical sciences by understanding nature's forces in space, and achieve an understanding of the human experience in space.

In late 2001, BPRES was created as NASA's fifth strategic enterprise. BPRES closed its first fiscal year with a significant record of accomplishment. It expanded its interagency research collaborations, establishing a new memorandum of understanding with the United States Department of Agriculture, conducting a joint research solicitation with the National Cancer Institute, and continuing work under 18 other agreements with the National Institutes of Health. A BPRES investigator received the Nobel Prize in physics for ground-based research that he plans to extend and expand on the International Space Station. Outfitting the International Space Station (ISS) for research began with the delivery of the Human Research Facility in March 2001. Two research equipment racks were delivered to the ISS in mid-April and an additional two at the beginning of Expedition 3 in August. BPRES initiated a program of research on the ISS to take advantage of available resources during the construction phase. The ISS Expedition 1 and 2 teams were able to exceed expectations for meeting research objectives of the planned experiments, with only one unsuccessful experiment due to technical reasons.

In 2002, BPRES will continue to increase knowledge and demonstrate key technology capabilities for humans in space, address critical questions in crew health and safety, and materials science and commercial research payloads will be flown on both the Space Shuttle and aboard ISS. The Space Station research program is on track to deliver another five equipment racks on orbit by the end of calendar year 2002. BPRES also will complete definition studies leading to award of a contract to manage ISS utilization to a Non-Governmental Organization (NGO). Working with the scientific community, its advisory committees, and the Administration, BPRES will complete the development of research priorities across its portfolio of research endeavors to provide a basis for critical resource allocation decisions. In the area of public outreach and education, BPRES plans to develop electronic and printed educational materials that focus on biological and physical research.

In 2003, BPRES will implement its research priorities and develop ISS flight facilities to achieve a prioritized and productive research program. BPRES will also work with Life Science Museum Network members to explore opportunities for the development of projects, special events, or workshops focused on the life sciences and biology-related research themes to attract and engage public audiences. In addition, BPRES will make available to wide audiences an online database of Commercial Space Center activities, including publications listings, patents, and other information useful to the general public.

Earth Science.—The mission of NASA's Earth Science Enterprise (ESE) is to develop a scientific understanding of the Earth system and its response to natural and human-induced changes to enable improved prediction of climate, weather and natural hazards for present and future generations. ESE seeks to answer a question of fundamental importance to science and society: How is the Earth system changing, and what are the consequences for life on Earth? To do so, ESE is developing the interdisciplinary research field of Earth System Science, which recognizes that the Earth's land surface, oceans, atmosphere, ice sheets, and life itself all interact in a highly dynamic system. Earth system science is an area of research with immense benefit to the Nation, leading to new knowledge and tools that may improve weather forecasting, agriculture, urban and regional planning, environmental quality, and natural disaster management. ESE has established three goals to pursue in order to fulfill its mission: (1) Science—observe, understand, and model the Earth system to learn how it is changing, and the consequences for life on Earth; (2) Applications—expand and accelerate the realization of economic and societal benefits from Earth science, information, and technology; (3) Technology—develop and adopt advanced technologies to enable mission success and serve national priorities.

In ESE Science, 2001 was another year of substantial accomplishment toward understanding the Earth system. Goddard Space Flight Center (GSFC) produced the first global record of the Earth's biosphere, showing the uptake and release of carbon by land and oceans continuously over three years. NASA-sponsored research showed that the growing season over parts of the Northern hemisphere has lengthened over the past two decades, with an accompanying increase in lushness of vegetation. NASA and the EarthSAT Corporation released the first consistent 30-m resolution land cover map for the U.S., and are nearing completion of the global map. These data are from calendar year 1990 and provide a basis for comparison of future change; plans are being developed to repeat the process for calendar year 2001 and beyond. Results from a major NASA/NSF-led international research campaign indicate that aerosols from dust and pollution may be reducing evaporation and thus slowing the global water cycle. Results from comparing the 2000 and 1997 Antarctic Mapping Missions have led to new estimates of change in the Antarctic ice sheet; ice in the Lambert glacier flows from the interior to the "mouth" where it reaches a rate of 1 kilometer per year. In the Northern hemisphere, NASA researchers identified patterns of change in sea ice extent over a twenty-year period; overall, Arctic sea ice extent has decreased since calendar year 1978. Continued monitoring of global ocean topography showed that the Pacific Decadal Oscillation governs climate impacts of the Pacific in non-El Nino/La Nina years, and allowed the prediction of last winter's chill across the northern U.S. and relative warmth across the South. ESE also made major advances in computing for climate modeling, using a partnership among two NASA Centers and Silicon Graphics, Inc. to simulate 900 days of Earth's climate in one day, up from the prior capability of 70 days per day; performance on end-to-end climate simulation improved ten-fold. This greatly enhances climate modelers' ability to perform the multiple runs of many years of climate simulations needed to generate useful projections of climate change.

In ESE Applications, ESE has entered into a variety of partnerships that will apply the goods and services made possible by ESE's research. ESE provides QuikSCAT data in real time to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) to improve marine weather forecasting, and has used these data to show that severe storms forming over the oceans can be predicted two days in advance. ESE is working with the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to use remote sensing tools to update their flood plain maps throughout the U.S. In a partnership called Agriculture 2020 with the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) and four growers associations representing 100,000 farmers, ESE is demonstrating how to increase crop productivity, reduce risks to crop health, and manage environmental impacts. With the National Institutes of Health, we are exploring the use of satellite data to predict spread of infectious diseases such as malaria that are highly influenced by weather and climate. Throughout the summer, three ESE satellites tracked devastating wildfires in the western U.S., providing data to the U.S. Forest Service (USFS) and regional authorities. As a result, USFS is investing in direct broadcast receiving stations to rapidly acquire data from NASA's Terra satellite.

In ESE Technology, the Enterprise's first New Millennium Program satellite to demonstrate a variety of new technologies for Earth Science successfully completed all its demonstration tasks (save one high-risk propulsion task scheduled for near the end of mission life). These include a new instrument to produce a Landsat-type sensor one-fourth the size of the current Landsat 7 instrument, and the first hyperspectral imager in space, which views the land surface in hundreds of spectral channels rather than the conventional five to seven channels. Sponsored technology research with universities, industry and other government laboratories moved 35% of ESE's new remote sensing instrument concepts one step closer to reality on an established scale of technology maturity. These advances will substantially reduce the cost and enhance the capability of new satellites over the next decade or more. ESE also began formation flying of four land imaging satellites, demonstrating that several smaller satellites can be operated in tandem to dramatically increase spatial and temporal coverage.

ESE is in the midst of deployment of the Earth Observing System (EOS), a set of spacecraft and associated interdisciplinary science investigations to initiate a long-term data set of key parameters required for the study of global climate change. The first six EOS satellites are already in orbit, including Jason-1 and SAGE III, launched in December 2001. The remaining EOS satellites will be launched through calendar year 2004, including Aqua (calendar year 2002) to study the water cycle and atmospheric circulation, and Aura (calendar year 2004) to probe the chemistry of the upper and lower atmosphere. Complementing EOS is a series of small, focused Earth System Science Pathfinder missions to explore Earth system processes never before examined globally from space. Data from the EOS satellites already in orbit are being acquired, processed, and distributed by the EOS Data and Information System (EOSDIS), which is currently handling more than 1 terabyte of data per day. EOSDIS handled 12.3 million user queries for over 15 million products in calendar year 2001. EOSDIS continues to evolve as new satellites are launched, and as new partners are added to produce data products with innovative applications.

As it deploys EOS, ESE is also planning for the future. ESE and U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) released a request for proposal for Landsat Data Continuity Mission to succeed Landsat 7; it is being implemented as a commercial data purchase. ESE is also planning for the transition of several of its key research observations to the Nation's weather satellite system. The Department of Defense (DoD), NOAA and NASA have established an Integrated Program Office (IPO) to create a converged civilian and military weather satellite system called the National Polar-orbiting Operational Environmental Satellite System (NPOESS) to replace the present generation of separate systems. NASA and the IPO are jointly funding the NPOESS Preparatory Project (NPP) that will simultaneously continue key measurements begun by EOS and demonstrate instruments for NPOESS. The NPP will save money for both NASA and NOAA by combining essential atmospheric and Earth surface observations on a single platform, and by seeking to meet both climate science and operational weather requirements with the same advanced instruments.

ESE data products and research are a major contribution to the U.S. Global Change Research Program, an interagency collaboration overseen by the Committee on Natural Resources of the National Science and Technology Council. NASA ESE will also contribute to the new Climate Change Initiative, a multiagency effort with strong focus on outcomes. Because Earth science is inherently global in scope, ESE is engaged in a variety of international partnerships with individual nation's space agencies, and with international consortia such as the World Meteorological Organization. ESE seeks and receives scientific advice on a broad range of topics from the various boards and committees of the National Research Council. These partnerships, together with those above, ensure that NASA's Earth Science Enterprise conducts research at the frontiers of Earth science on questions of practical importance to the Nation.

Aerospace Technology.—The Aerospace Technology (AST) Enterprise mission is to pioneer the identification, development, verification, transfer, application, and commercialization of high-payoff aerospace technologies and the development of broad, crosscutting revolutionary innovations critical to a number of NASA missions. The Enterprise plays a key role in: 1) maintaining a safe and efficient national aviation system, 2) enabling affordable, reliable space transportation systems, and 3) developing basic technologies for a broad range of space applications. Research and development programs conducted by the Enterprise contribute to NASA's science and exploration missions, national security, economic growth, and the long-term competitiveness of American aerospace companies. The Enterprise directly supports national policy in both aeronautics and space as directed in the President's Goals for a National Partnership in Aeronautics and Research Technology, the National Space Policy, and the National Space Transportation Policy.

A modern air and space transportation system is fundamental to our national economy, quality of life, and security of the United States. For 75 years, a strong base for aerospace technology research and development has provided enormous contributions to this system, contributions that have fostered the economic growth of our Nation and provided unprecedented mobility for U. S. citizens. Although major technical advances have made our Nation's air and space transportation system the largest and best of its kind, the future holds critical challenges to its continued growth and performance. Because the U. S. air and space transportation system serves both the public good and critical national security needs, ensuring the continued health and preeminence of that system is a key issue for the future of the Nation.

Although NASA technology benefits the aerospace industry directly, the creative application of NASA's advanced technology to disparate design and development challenges has made numerous contributions to other areas such as the environment, surface transportation, and medicine.

In order to develop the aerospace systems of the future, revolutionary approaches to system design and technology development will be necessary. Pursuing technology fields that are in their infancy today, developing the knowledge bases necessary to design radically new aerospace systems, and performing efficient, high-confidence design and development of revolutionary vehicles are challenges that face us in innovation. These challenges are intensified by the demand for safety in our highly complex aerospace systems.

The President's 2003 Budget provides the resources necessary to maintain the progress required to achieve a 21st Century aviation system that is safe, environmentally friendly, efficient and meets the growing demands for increased and predictable performance. The President's 2003 Budget also supports technology development for space transportation systems that are safer and significantly less costly than today's systems. The structure of the Aerospace Technology budget has been changed so that the budget lines are directly linked to the Enterprise Strategic Goals. The first goal, Revolutionize Aviation, addresses fundamental, systemic issues in the aviation system to ensure continued growth and development appropriate to the needs of the national and global economies. These systemic issues—safety, capacity, environmental compatibility, and mobility—cut across markets including large subsonic civil transports, air cargo, commuter and general aviation. NASA coordinates its investments and technology objectives in this area with the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) and the Department of Defense through the National Research and Development Plan for Aviation Security, Efficiency, and Environmental Compatibility. In 2003, the President's Budget provides for the demonstration of several advanced technologies that when implemented will result in a significant reduction in aviation accidents. Specific flight evaluations will include an integrated Synthetic Vision System and Runway Incursion Prevention System intended for use on commercial and business aircraft, a next-generation cockpit weather information digital datalink and turbulence awareness system, and a smart icing management system which will automatically activate and manage an aircraft's ice protection systems. In addition, ground-based demonstrations of an advanced vehicle health management system, an engine disk crack detection monitoring system and recovery methods for flight critical systems will be accomplished. The Administration's request also provides for continued development of the technologies necessary to reduce the environmental impact of today's aircraft. The sector testing of a jet engine combustor that could reduce nitrous oxide emissions by 70 percent will be complete. Selection of contractors to proceed with full annular testing for large and regional jet engines will also be complete. Additionally, the Administration's request includes funding for the development of a broad suite of advanced technologies that will provide the basis for future emission reductions including carbon dioxide. The request also includes the continuation of the noise reduction technology that in calendar year 2007 will reduce the perceived aircraft noise pollution by a factor of two from the calendar year 1997 baseline set by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO). The budget request also continues to transfer to the Federal Aviation Administration technologies required to safely increase the use of the National Airspace System (NAS). In order to define future technology investments in this area, the Virtual Airspace Modeling and Simulation project will provide state-of-the-art models of the airspace system which have the capability to model the dynamic effects of interactive agents in the NAS. These models will provide the capability to assess the economic impact of new technologies on the operational performance of the NAS and thus guide future technology development. The budget request continues the Small Aircraft Transportation System (SATS) demonstration program. In 2003, SATS will select candidate technologies for experimental flight evaluation based on their impact on mobility—either through reduced system cost, improved doorstep-to-destination time, increased trip reliability, and/or improved safety—and complete initial lower landing minimum and higher volume flight experiments. Building on its altitude world-record-setting performances, the Environmental Research Aircraft and Sensor Technology (ERAST) project will demonstrate a solar power unpowered air vehicle with the ability to fly 14 hours above 50,000 feet. The accomplishment of this goal could have significant impact on the application of these systems in disaster relief, communications, environmental sensing, and defense.

The second goal, Advance Space Transportation, will create a safe, affordable highway through the air and into space by improving safety, reliability, and operability, and significantly reducing the cost of space transportation systems. With the creation of the Integrated Space Transportation Plan (ISTP), NASA defined a single, integrated investment strategy for all its space transportation efforts, including Space Shuttle safety investments, the Space Launch Initiative (SLI), and 3rd Generation Space Transportation Technology. By investing in a sustained progression of research and technology development, NASA will enable future generations of reusable launch vehicles and in-space transportation systems that will surmount the Earth-to-orbit challenge and allow less costly, more frequent, and more reliable access to neighboring planets and the stars beyond. As planned in the 2002 Budget, the President's 2003 Budget request includes an increase in funding for the Space Launch Initiative (SLI), which supports the 2nd Generation Reusable Launch Vehicle (RLV) Program. In 2001, NASA awarded 23 contracts under the 2nd Generation RLV Program for study and risk reduction activities across many technical areas, including: airframes, vehicle subsystems, operations, integrated vehicle health management, flight mechanics, NASA-unique systems, and propulsion. In 2003, the Main Engine Prototype Critical Design Review and the Systems Requirements Review will be complete and the Architecture Systems Requirements Document will be baselined. Upon completion of these activities, NASA will downselect to a minimum of two space transportation architectures for continued development based on their ability to meet safety and affordability goals. This selection will determine what architectures and critical technology developments will be continued through 2006. The successful completion of 2nd Generation RLV Program risk reduction and technology development will enable a mid-decade competition to transition all of NASA's launch needs, including human space flight, to safer, lower cost, commercially competitive, privately operated vehicles at the turn of the decade. In 3rd Generation Space Transportation Technology, the Department of Defense and NASA have collaborated on an integrated science and technology plan for hypersonics research, the National Hypersonic Science and Technology Plan (NHP), which defines a national effort to address numerous challenges. The plan addresses airbreathing propulsion or, in some cases, combined rocket/airbreathing (RBCC) or turbine/airbreathing propulsion (TBCC) cycles. While pure rockets have already achieved hypersonic speeds, airbreathing technologies could offer significant benefits over rocket propulsion in performance and cost. In 2003, NASA will complete the independent evaluation of three competing, revolutionary hypersonic propulsion technology systems demonstrations, including an RBCC engine, a TBCC engine and a scramjet engine.

The third goal, Pioneer Technology Innovation, focuses on broad, crosscutting innovations critical to a number of NASA missions and to the aerospace industry in general. Pursuing technology fields that are in their infancy today, developing the knowledge bases necessary to design radically new aerospace systems, and developing tools for efficient, high-confidence design and development will enable a revolution in aerospace. The Administration's request includes a significant investment in computing and information technology developments and also increases investment in biotechnology and nanotechnology—the revolutionary technologies of the 21st Century. To ensure the highest quality research and strong ties to NASA's missions—Space Science, Earth Science, Biological and Physical Research, Human Space Flight, and Aerospace Technology—these investments will be guided by technology development agreements signed by customers in other NASA Enterprises.

Beginning in 2002, NASA will have the National Academy of Sciences undertake reviews of one of these three program areas—Revolutionize Aviation, Advance Space Transportation, and Pioneer Technology Innovation—every three years. These reviews will provide independent assessments of the quality of NASA's technology research and program planning, whether the research can be performed by universities or corporations outside NASA, and how well NASA's technology research integrates with customer needs. In each of these program areas, NASA will also seek to reduce institutional costs at it field centers so more funds can be invested in technology research through openly competed NASA research announcements and through university and industry partnerships.

The fourth goal, Commercialize Technology, extends the commercial application of NASA technology for economic benefit and improved quality of life. By partnering with both aerospace and non-aerospace industry as well as academia, the full range of NASA's assets—technological expertise, new technologies, and research facilities—are made available to help the Nation.

Academic Programs.—Academic Programs has two components: (1) Education Program and (2) Minority University Program. Since the creation of NASA, the agency has made a substantial commitment to education. NASA's contribution to education has been and is based on the Agency's inspiring mission, specialized workforce, close working relationship with the research and education community, and unique world-class facilities. Based on these attributes, NASA has created a comprehensive education program containing a portfolio of activities directed toward education at all levels. The guidance for the Education Program stated in the NASA Strategic Plan: "Educational Excellence: We involve the educational community in our endeavors to inspire America's students, create learning opportunities, and enlighten inquisitive minds." NASA's Education Program brings students and educators at all levels into its missions and its research as participants and partners, providing opportunities for a diverse group of students and educators to experience first hand involvement with NASA personnel, facilities, and research and development activities.

The Minority University Research Program has a goal to: expand NASA's research base by strengthening the research capabilities of minority universities and colleges; contribute to the scientific and technological workforce; and promote educational excellence. The range of activities conducted under this program will continue to capture the interest of all students in science and technology, develop talented students at the undergraduate and graduate levels, provide research opportunities for students and faculty members at NASA centers, and strengthen and enhance the research capabilities of the Nation's colleges and universities.

Together, these two components of the Academic Programs budget provide guidance for the Agency's interaction with both the formal and informal education community.

In 2001, this appropriation provides funding for mission support and includes: safety, mission assurance, engineering and advanced concepts activities supporting agency programs; salaries and related expenses in support of research in NASA field installations; design, repair, rehabilitation and modification of institutional facilities and construction of new institutional facilities; and other operations activities supporting conduct of agency programs.

Since 2002, NASA has implemented a two-appropriation budget (excluding the Inspector General account). The two-appropriation budget (Human Space Flight (HSF) and Science, Aeronautics and Technology (SAT)) is NASA's first step at transitioning to a full cost budget. While full cost will ultimately integrate institutional and programmatic funds into a single budget, that integration is done in a step-wise manner, by providing for a mission support budget line under each Enterprise and eliminating the present mission support appropriation. This initial step will begin to recognize, budget, and track direct full time equivalent (FTE) personnel associated at the Enterprise level and then use this FTE data to distribute other-than-direct (OTD) institutional costs (Research and Program Management and non-programmatic Construction of Facilities) using the relative percentages of direct FTE's by Enterprise.

This means the distribution of the OTD resources takes advantage of a basic assumption, to be used prior to the existence of cost and service pools, that FTE's are a reasonable relative indicator at the Enterprise level of required facility and institutional capabilities. Taking this step will help program/project personnel and decision makers begin to understand the potential magnitude of institutional funds that are associated with each Enterprise in preparation for the day when full cost budgeting will distribute these funds most appropriately to the project level via the appropriate cost/service pools.

Beginning in 2002, there is no longer a Mission Support account. Institutional costs will be budgeted within HSF and SAT (as discussed above) and safety, mission assurance and engineering will be budgeted within the HSF account.

NASA plans to control personnel levels through full time permanent (FTP) civil servant positions while continuing to track full time equivalent positions, as done in the past. This will allow NASA more flexibility in the use of non-permanent positions for short-term technical needs as well as co-op and intern programs.

Performance Objectives

Research and program management.—In 2001, this activity provided for the salaries, travel support, other personnel expenses of the entire NASA civil service workforce, and includes vital support to the physical plant at the Centers and at NASA Headquarters.

Construction of facilities.—In 2001, this activity provided for facility construction activities to preserve NASA's infrastructure and enable NASA's missions; environmental compliance and restoration activities, design of facilities projects, and advanced planning and critical functional leadership activities related to future facilities needs. Activities in support of construction projects to repair, revitalize and modernize the basic infrastructure and institutional facilities at NASA centers will continue with the major focus on eliminating safety-related concerns. Increasing attention is being given to activities in support of environmental compliance and restoration requirements.

Note—Includes $74 million in budget authority in BY for research activities transferred from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the U.S. Geological Survey.

The research and related activities appropriation enables the United States to provide leadership and promote progress across the expanding frontiers of scientific and engineering research and education. This appropriation provides resources for NSF to achieve the following goals for strategic outcomes: enabling discovery across the frontier of science and engineering, connected to learning, innovation and service of society; development of a diverse, internationally competitive and globally-engaged workforce of scientists, engineers and well-prepared citizens; and providing broadly accessible, state-of-the-art research and education tools. Research activities will contribute to the achievement of these goals through development of intellectual capital, integration of research and education, and promotion of partnerships. This appropriation supports NSF’s active development of performance indicators.

The major research program activities of the Foundation are:

Biological sciences.—This activity promotes scientific progress in biology through support of research ranging from the study of molecules, through cells and organisms, to studies of ecosystems. This activity also supports a comprehensive research initiative on plant genomes, including research on economically significant crops.

Computer and information sciences and engineering.—Research is directed at “information technology” in the broadest sense of the term, ranging from fundamental theory to systems engineering.

Engineering.—Research supported by this activity aims to increase U.S. engineering capability and strength, and focus that capability and strength on areas which are relevant to national problems and long-term needs. This activity also includes small business innovation research.

Education and human resources (EHR) activities provide a comprehensive set of programs that further NSF’s goal of ensuring a diverse, internationally competitive and globally-engaged workforce of scientists, engineers and well-prepared citizens. At the pre-kindergarten through grade 12 (pre K–12) level, EHR catalyzes reform of science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) education through the development of public-private partnerships. Its pre K–12 programs provide new instructional materials and pedagogical techniques that incorporate the latest advances in teaching, learning, and educational technologies. They also support training activities for pre-service and in-service STEM teachers. Undergraduate programs improve curricula, strengthen laboratory course offerings, enhance faculty, and lead reform efforts in STEM disciplines. Programs for advanced technological education strengthen education for students preparing to enter the high-technology workforce. Graduate level support is directed primarily to fellowships and traineeships to sustain the U.S. world leadership in science and technology. All EHR programming focuses on broadening participation of groups underrepresented in STEM fields including activities focused on the improvement of infrastructure and academic programs at minority-serving institutions. The Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research (EPSCoR) broadens participation of States and regions in science and engineering by helping institutions expand their research capacity and competitiveness. EHR supports research that advances STEM education, as well as development and effective implementation of learning technologies. Evaluation and communications activities ensure accountability by developing indicators that measure program impact and inform the education community of best practices and relevant information. Also included within EHR are funds resulting from the collection and use of H–1B non-immigrant fees, for undergraduate and graduate scholarships in computer science, mathematics, and engineering and private-public partnerships in K–12 for STEM education. This appropriation also supports NSF’s active development of performance indicators.

The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) is responsible for personnel management functions which include the following activities:

Merit systems oversight and effectiveness.—This activity includes: (a) evaluating human resources management (HRM) in Federal agencies through various methods, including on-site reviews and special studies; (b) administering classification appeals, Fair Labor Standards Act, and Intergovernmental Personnel programs to ensure that agencies adhere to the statutory requirements; (c) helping agencies develop merit-based HRM accountability systems to support mission accomplishment; (d) assessing the effectiveness of Governmentwide HRM policies and programs and serving as a clearinghouse for best practices; (e) testing and evaluating innovative HRM practices and systems, including demonstration projects under 5 U.S.C. Chapter 47; (f) providing readily accessible statistics on the Federal workforce; (g) providing electronic transfer of other human resources data throughout the Federal sector; and (h) administering parts of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Program performance.—The activity's performance measures are designed to assess the value-added outcomes which oversight reviews, accountability and demonstration projects, and workforce information have on the Federal HRM community and employees. Client feedback is solicited on each review, product, and service. For example, clients rate the overall value of the oversight work as 4.0 or above of a 5-point scale. The quality of data that is provided to clients is regularly assessed, and is used in reviews, studies, and projects. Of each agency's records entered into the Central Personnel Data File, at least 97 percent are correct on all core elements. The Merit System Principles Survey, used to collect employee perceptions of the merit system principles, is content valid and reliable. OPM conducts 15 to 17 nationwide agency oversight reviews each year to ensure compliance with Federal Civil Service merit principles.

Employment Service.—The Employment Service performs core human resources (HR) leadership functions. These functions include developing, implementing, and monitoring employment policies for agencies in the areas of workforce planning, recruiting, selecting, promoting, reassigning, downsizing and reshaping. The Service monitors and reports on governmentwide diversity and veterans efforts, provides technical assistance on a variety of staffing issues, and operates the personnel program for the Administrative Law Judges. Additionally, the Service provides HR best practice information to Federal agencies, offers automated staffing solutions, and operates the Federal job information system USAJOBS. In 2002 and 2003, the Service will focus on improving the Federal hiring process, enhancing the image of the public service, conducting occupational studies of homeland security and executive succession planning, and expanding the Government's ability to recruit, develop, and retain computer security professionals.

Program performance.—The Employment Service establishes annual performance goals and objectives designed to accomplish long-term goals identified in OPM's Strategic Plan. Progress is monitored through a mix of outcome and output measures, including results of oversight reviews, qualitative feedback on the usefulness of policies and information processes, customer satisfaction with services, cost-comparison analyses, workload accomplishment data, and quality and timeliness of information.

The Employment Service provided employment information to over 20.7 million people in 2001 through a nationwide system available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, by telephone, fax, and internet. USAJOBS averages more than 56,000 visits daily. This is an increase from the previous year and is expected to continue to grow.

The Employment Service conducts a recertification and training program for all agency Delegated Examining Units to ensure that agencies are carrying out their delegated responsibilities in accordance with law and regulation, and accomplished all scheduled recertifications.

In 2001, Employment Service published several regulations such as the Career Intern Interim regulations and final regulations for the Student Loan Repayment program and continued to assist employees with outplacement assistance and selection priority for other jobs. The Service also helped advance the President's Strategic Management of Human Capital initiative by proposing legislation to streamline the hiring process, which was included in the Administration's Managerial Flexibility Act of 2001, and providing technical assistance and tools to help agencies conduct a workforce analysis and develop a restructuring plan.

Retirement and Insurance.— This Activity encompasses administration of Earned Employee Benefits—the retirement and insurance programs—for Federal employees, retired Federal employees, and their families. These programs include the Civil Service Retirement System, the Federal Employees Retirement System, the Federal Employees Group Life Insurance Program, and the Federal Employees and Retired Employees Health Benefits Programs. The Long-Term Care Security Act (P.L. 106-265) authorizes OPM to offer group long term care insurance for Federal employees and retirees, their spouses, parents, and parents-in-law. In addition, this Activity includes OPM's efforts designed to stay abreast of, and respond to, developments in non-Federal fringe benefits practices.

Program performance.—The Retirement Systems Modernization (RSM) Project is OPM's central strategy to meet its long term customer service, financial management and business goals for the Retirement Program. To achieve these strategic goals, OPM will move from a paper-based record keeping system to program-wide electronic data and transactions. The project will be implemented in phases, with full results achieved in 2008. Close coordination with another OPM initiative, the Human Resources Data Network, will minimize the data agencies must send to OPM. OPM is developing universal tools that use electronic data, and has already introduced a prototype Benefits Calculator and a Benefits Booklet for retiring employees. The calculator, used by OPM to process FERS claims, reduced claims processing times by 45 percent. The benefits booklet provides personalized benefits information, contributing to improved customer satisfaction. During FY 2002, OPM will complete two applications that will provide immediate benefits. A Retirement Data Exchange Gateway will allow OPM and agencies to eliminate obsolete technology and reduce the delay some retiring employees experience in receiving their first benefit payment. A Coverage Determination Application will improve the accuracy of retirement coverage decisions made by agencies. During FY 2003, OPM will begin to convert member data, currently stored in paper form at the Retirement Operations Center and at Federal agencies, to electronic media. This will contribute to improved benefits counseling and case development by agencies, reduced benefit claims processing time and elimination of paper record storage and management. In addition, OPM will pilot, with the USPS, a non-HR-DN data capture capability, and will develop web-enabled self-service for retirement benefits, i.e., on line applications. RSM results in more efficient and effective retirement claims processing, record keeping, benefits counseling and financial management. Ninety-three percent of customers reported that they were generally satisfied to very satisfied with OPM's delivery of retirement services. This continues a five-year trend of satisfaction levels in the 90 percent range. In addition, the American Customer Satisfaction Index (ASCI) measured the satisfaction federal retirees and survivor annuitants had with the retirement services delivered, and the level of satisfaction improved from 73 in 2000, to 78 in 2001.

OPM continues to improve its telecommunication services. Toll-free telephone access is provided to all call centers, interactive features are available through the telephone system, and hours of operation have been extended until 8:00 P.M.E.S.T. In addition, to better serve customers, OPM has enhanced its ability to meet their needs by adding on-line features for our Spanish-speaking customers, and translating often-used benefits material into Spanish. The volume of telephone inquiries handled increased by 8 percent during FY 2001. Customer satisfaction levels regarding the courtesy, clarity, and timeliness of telephone services remain high at 90 percent.

The volume of new annuity claims remained steady. OPM has received and processed an average of 170,000 Civil Service and Federal Employees Retirement Systems annuity and survivor claims annually over the past 5 years. The average processing time for interim annuity payments in 2001 was reduced from 5 days to 3 days. More than 48% of interim payments were authorized within one day. The time needed to calculate and begin paying retirees their final annuity was reduced by more than 30% from an average of 115 days in 2000 to 78 days in 2001. OPM increased its claims processing capacity and efficiency through the use of enhanced technical platforms. Customer satisfaction with the timeliness of the first annuity payment has remained at or near 80 percent since FY 1997 and is much improved over the 73 percent observed in FY 1995.

OPM also maintained its leadership in the direct deposit program, an efficient means of ensuring that customers receive their annuity payment each month. Customer satisfaction levels with receipt of annuity checks are at 97 percent, continuing another long-standing trend. During 1998, OPM implemented a direct mail campaign to inform annuitants and survivors of the convenience and desirability of direct deposit. As a result, participation rose from 79 percent at the start of 1998, to nearly 93 percent today. OPM will expand the direct deposit program to our overseas customers by participating in the International Direct Deposit Program beginning mid-FY 2002.

The FEHBP continues to be a hallmark for employer sponsored health insurance programs. To maintain this recognition, OPM will ensure that customers are enrolled in highly rated health plans that deliver quality care in a cost-effective manner. During FY 2003, OPM will continue to address patient safety, collaborating with others in the health care industry to develop the "Five Steps to Patient Safety." These "Steps" have been widely adopted both in and out of Government. Participating health plans have already adopted some patient safety initiatives and are working with participating providers to articulate and disseminate information about the safety initiatives that they have put in practice. Health plans have also updated provider directories, where appropriate, to inform their membership of important safety measures. These initiatives include such practices as the use of automated entry systems for prescription drugs, referring patients to recognized Centers of Excellence, and staffing appropriately for Intensive Care Units. Other consumer protections and quality initiatives now provided by FEHBP plans include, but are not limited to: transitional care for those with chronic or disabling conditions; the right to review medical records and to correct inaccurate ones; and direct access to women's health care providers.

OPM continues to build and maintain strong relationships with the National Committee for Quality Assurance (NCQA), the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations (JCAHO), the National Quality Forum, the Quality Interagency Coordination (QuIC) Taskforce, the Washington Business Group on Health, the Leapfrog Group, the Health Care Financing Administration and other components of the Department of Health and Human Services. These partnerships have been instrumental in promoting the use of health care quality outcome measures by the Federal government and health care purchasers and providers throughout the nation.

OPM is taking initial steps to standardize and centralize data on health plan performance in a data repository. This will enable staff to more easily analyze the information, begin benchmarking, and provide feedback to plans for quality improvement.

The Long Term Care Security Act, which was passed in FY 2000, authorizes OPM to offer long term care insurance to approximately 20 million people by October 2002. OPM plans to offer a flexible long term care product, including provisions for nursing home care, assisted living, home health care and adult day care. Insurance will be offered to civil service, postal and uniformed services personnel, government retirees and specified relatives, such as spouses, parents, in-laws and stepparents. OPM estimates that 300,000 to 600,000 individuals will enroll during the first sign-up period in FY 2003. Enrollees will pay the full cost of insurance premiums at group rates that are expected to be lower than rates for comparable coverage sold privately on an individual basis. OPM will draft regulations for the new program and will oversee an education campaign to explain long-term care options to employees and retirees. OPM will assure that consumer materials and guidance are readily accessible to help individuals make informed choices about purchasing the long-term care product(s) that will be available to them.

In late FY 2000, legislation was enacted to provide relief to employees who were placed in the wrong retirement system. The Federal Erroneous Retirement Coverage Corrections Act (FERCCA) allows most of these employees a choice in retirement plans. OPM's implementation strategy is to provide a consistent high level of customer service to everyone who is eligible for relief so that affected individuals can make informed decisions. OPM developed a web page at www.opm.gov/benefits/correction with information about the Act. To date, about 6,300 affected individuals have been registered in our database. OPM began the review of records to determine eligibility in September 2001 and affected individuals will receive counseling beginning January 2002. The process of identifying affected individuals and providing counseling services is expected to be completed by the end of 2002.

Workforce compensation and performance.—This activity includes; (a) developing and implementing pay and leave administration policy and evaluating the effectiveness of alternative compensation systems; (b) developing classification policies and systems and designing flexible alternatives to current systems; and (c) developing Governmentwide policy concerning performance management.

Program performance.—The workforce compensation and performance program area uses a variety of measures to identify its level of success. Overall customer service is measured through OPM's Customer Satisfaction Survey, surveys of attendees at conferences, workshops, and/or seminars, and feedback from users of our website and email. The 2000 HR Directors' Customer Satisfaction Survey showed that the percentage of human resources directors who were satisfied with policy leadership in WCPS program areas were as follows; 87 percent in pay and leave administration, 78 percent in performance management, 68 percent in position classification and position management, and 62 percent in the Federal Wage System. In 2001 the organization staged the second Strategic Compensation Conference. On a five-point scale, the average overall rating of the Conference was 4.33, an increase from 4.14 for the 1999 Conference, and 4.23 for the 2000 Conference. The overall improvement in perception of outcomes in WCPS program areas is demonstrated by the increase in positive responses in a national survey of more than 20,000 Federal employees. Favorable responses increased in one year from 26 percent to 31 percent on the question "are you clear about how good performance is defined in your organization?" On the issue "recognition and rewards are based on merit," positive responses increased from 30 to 34 percent.

Investigations.—This activity focuses on assuring applicant and appointee fitness and suitability, and oversight of the investigative contract company.

Workforce relations.—This activity includes: (a) developing governmentwide policies, issuing guidance, and providing assistance to agencies on employee relations issues, including actions based on misconduct and unacceptable performance, as well as alternative dispute resolution; (b) Promoting and supporting Federal work/life and wellness programs; (c) providing leadership and policy guidance in support of agency human resource development programs and training initiatives; and (d) providing guidance, information, and assistance to agencies on collective bargaining and labor-management relations to help them develop effective labor relations programs.

Program performance.—OPM’s workforce relations performance measures are designed to determine the value added by OPM’s policy leadership and guidance on employee and labor-management relations issues, work/life programs, and human resource development programs. The Office of Workforce Relations (OWR) uses a variety of measures to identify its level of success. For instance, surveys at regular intervals assess the extent to which our customers feel that their needs are met by OWR products and services such as printed and electronic materials, conferences, seminars, and workshops, as well as by legislative and regulatory proposals coming from OWR.

Executive resources.—This activity provides Government-wide program leadership, policy direction and technical assistance on all aspects of the Senior Executive Service personnel system and comparable executive systems.

Administrative services.—This activity includes: OPM personnel and equal employment opportunity, security, facilities, telecommunications, publishing, acquisitions, and information resources management to support all OPM programs.

Executive and other services.—This activity includes: executive direction, policy development, legal advice and representation, public affairs, legislative activities, financial management, and the operating expenses of the President’s Commission on White House Fellows.

Reimbursable programs.—OPM performs reimbursable work at the request of other agencies. OPM also provides administrative, information resources management, and executive services to other OPM accounts on a reimbursable basis.

This appropriation provides agency-wide audit, investigative, evaluation, inspection, and administrative sanction functions to identify management and administrative deficiencies that may create conditions for fraud, waste, and mismanagement. The audits function provides internal agency audit, insurance audit, contract audit, and information systems audit services. Contract audits provide professional advice to agency contracting officials on accounting and financial matters regarding the negotiation, award, administration, repricing, and settlement of contracts. Internal agency audits review and evaluate all facets of agency operations, including financial statements. Insurance audits review the operations of health and life insurance carriers, health care providers, and insurance subscribers. Information systems audits review both general controls and application controls for the agency's systems and programs. The investigative function provides for the detection and investigation of improper and illegal activities involving programs, personnel, and operations. Administrative sanctions debar from participation in the health insurance program those health care providers whose conduct may pose a threat to the financial integrity of the program itself or to the well-being of insurance program enrollees. These Inspector General activities resulted in positive financial impacts of approximately $242 million, 22 criminal convictions, and 4,032 administrative sanctions in 2001.

For 2001 and 2002, this appropriation covers: (1) the Government's share of the cost of health insurance for annuitants as defined in sections 8901 and 8906 of title 5, United States Code; (2) the Government's share of the cost of health insurance for annuitants (who were retired when the Federal employees health benefits law became effective), as defined in the Retired Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1960; and (3) the Government's contribution for payment of administrative expenses incurred by the Office of Personnel Management in administration of the Act.

The budget authority for this account recognizes the amounts being remitted by the U.S. Postal Service (USPS) to finance a portion of its post-1971 annuitants' health benefit costs.

For 2003, this appropriation covers the annual appropriations necessary to provide for the liquidation of the Government's unfunded liability as of September 30, 2001, for post-retirement health benefits, as part of the "Accrual Funding of Post-retirement Health Benefits Costs for Federal Employees" subtitle in the President's Managerial Flexibility Act.

The Act would require OPM to determine the current liability of the Government for post-retirement costs under FEHB, excluding the Postal Service liability for post-June 30, 1971, for the period prior to enactment. OPM would then establish an amortization schedule to liquidate the liability over 40 years beginning in fiscal year 2003 and continuing through 2042. In addition, the Act would require OPM to determine the supplemental unfunded liability of the Fund as of the close of each fiscal year for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 2001, and provide for liquidation of such liability over the succeeding 30 years. This would provide for liquidation of any unfunded liability that may accrue after enactment.

Payment of Government share of retirement costs.—In 2001 and 2002, this payment amortizes increases in the static unfunded liability created since October 20, 1969 by any statute which authorizes new or liberalized benefits, an extension of retirement coverage, or pay increases. Beginning in 2003, this payment would liquidate the current unfunded liability by 2042, as provided by the “Accrual Funding of Pensions and Retirement Pay” subtitle of the President’s Managerial Flexibility Act.

The Act would require OPM to determine, as of September 30, 2001, the unfunded liability that is attributable to benefits payable under chapter 83 of Title 5 U.S.C., and to determine an appropriate amortization schedule, providing for the liquidation of that liability by October 1, 2041.

Transfers for interest on unfunded liability and payment of military service annuities.—In 2001 and 2002, this transfer covers interest on the static unfunded liability and annuity disbursements attributable to military service. In 2003, these transfers would be eliminated and replaced by the annual payment to liquidate the unfunded liability as discussed above.

Payments for spouse equity.—This payment provides survivor annuities to eligible former spouses of annuitants who died between September 1978 and May 1986 and who did not elect survivor coverage.

This presentation displays the new Employees Health Benefits Fund. In addition to the existing components of the current Employees Health Benefits Fund, this new Special Fund incorporates the proposed requirement for each agency to fund the accruing actuarial cost of Government contributions for post-retirement health benefits for its current participating employees. This new presentation is consistent with the "Accrual Funding of Post-retirement Health Benefits Costs for Federal Employees" subtitle in the President's Managerial Flexibility Act.

The additional agency contributions to pre-fund the cost of post-retirement health benefits for current employees would come from the appropriations or fund used to pay the participant's salary. For 2003, these additional agency contributions would be approximately $5.6 billion. The lines in these schedules labeled "agency contributions" reflect both this additional contribution and the standard agency contribution toward the payment of annual premiums. The practice of using cash accounting to fund the Postal Service liability attributable to civilian service performed after June 30, 1971, under title 5 U.S.C. 8906(g)(2) would remain unchanged under this proposal.

For additional information on the Employees Health Benefits Fund, please see the presentation of the Employees and Retired Employees Health Benefits Funds located at the end of this OPM chapter.

DOD testing.—OPM conducts military entrance exams for the Department of Defense (DOD) as a cost-effective and reliable provider. The Employment Service continued to provide testing for the Department of Defense in FY 2001, conducting approximately 14,509 student test sessions and 24,112 enlistment sessions.

Employment service.—OPM delivers employment information, examining services, automated staffing, and related human resource management services to Federal agencies nationwide. In 2001, we maintained contracts for a wide array of human resource products and services with the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches.

Investigations.—Through a contract with a private company, OPM conducts National Agency Check and Inquiry cases and background security investigations for Federal agencies on a reimbursable basis. To the extent that OPM is required to pay a fee to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for name and fingerprint checks, agencies are required to reimburse OPM for such fees through the revolving fund.

Workforce relations.—Through the Training and Management Assistance (TMA) program, OPM provides assistance to government agencies in managing the development of training and human resources management solutions that meet their specific short-term and long-range objectives. This is accomplished through an expedited contracting process, which is managed by an experienced team of HR and contracting professionals.

Program performance.—The TMA performance indicators are designed to measure the financial stability of the program and customer satisfaction. The financial indicator measures if program costs are met. The customer satisfaction indicator assures that TMA services are meeting the needs and objectives of client agencies.

Executive resources.—OPM conducts residential and non-residential programs for Federal executives and managers to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of Federal programs.

This fund: (1) pays annuities to retired employees or their survivors; (2) makes refunds to separated employees for amounts withheld and to beneficiaries of employees who died before retirement or before annuities equaled the amount withheld; and (3) pays expenses of the Office of Personnel Management and the Merit Systems Protection Board for administering the program. The fund covers two Federal civilian retirement systems: the Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS) and the Federal Employees' Retirement System (FERS).

CSRS is basically a defined benefit plan, covering Federal employees hired prior to 1984. CSRS participants do not participate in the Social Security system. FERS is a three-tiered pension program that uses Social Security as a base, provides an additional basic benefit, and includes a thrift savings plan. FERS covers employees hired after 1983 and formerly CSRS-covered employees who elected to join FERS.

For CSRS employees in 2003, as provided by the "Accrual Funding of Pensions and Retirement Pay" subtitle of the President's Managerial Flexibility Act, agencies would contribute the full accruing cost of pension benefits.

The Administration has proposed legislation to simplify the computation of annuities under the Civil Service Retirement System for individuals with part-time service. The change would eliminate an unintended adverse effect on employees who perform part-time service at the end of their careers, and provide agencies increased flexibility to recruit and retain personnel.

For 2001 and 2002, this display combines the Federal Employees Health Benefits (FEHB) fund and the Retired Employees Health Benefits (REHB) fund.

For 2003, this display presents only the REHB fund. The FEHB fund estimates have moved to Employees Health Benefits Fund presentation located at an earlier point in this OPM chapter.

The FEHB fund provides for the cost of health benefits for: (1) active employees; (2) employees who retired after June 1960, or their survivors; (3) those annuitants transferred from the REHB program as authorized by Public Law 93-246; and (4) the related expenses of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) in administering the program.

The REHB fund, created by the Retired Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1960, provides for: (1) the cost of health benefits for retired employees and survivors who enroll in a Government-sponsored uniform health benefits plan; (2) the contribution to retired employees and survivors who retain or purchase private health insurance; and (3) expenses of OPM in administering the program.

Budget program.—The balance of the FEHB fund is available for payments without fiscal year limitation. Numbers of participants at the end of each fiscal year are as follows:

	2001 actual	2002 est.	2003 est.
Active employees	2,198,895	2,198,000	2,197,000
Annuitants	1,875,912	1,923,000	1,948,000
Total	4,074,807	4,121,000	4,145,000

In determining a biweekly subscription rate to cover program costs, one percent is added for administrative expenses and three percent is added for a contingency reserve held by OPM for each carrier. OPM is authorized to transfer unused administrative reserve funds to the contingency reserve.

The REHB fund is available without fiscal year limitation. The amounts contributed by the Government are paid into the fund from annual appropriations. The number of participants at the end of each fiscal year are as follows:

	2001 actual	2002 est.	2003 est.
Uniform plan	911	750	630
Private plans	2,687	2,230	1,850
Total	3,598	2,980	2,480

Financing.—The funds are financed by: (1) withholdings from active employees and annuitants; (2) agency contributions for active employees; (3) Government contributions for annuitants appropriated to OPM; and (4) contributions made by the United States Postal Service in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 101-508 and Public Law 103-66.

Operating results.—Funds made available to carriers but not used to pay claims in the current period are carried forward as special reserves for use in subsequent periods.

OPM maintains a contingency reserve, funded by employee and Government contributions, that may be used to defray future cost increases or provide increased benefits. OPM makes payments to carriers from this reserve whenever carrier-held reserves fall below levels prescribed by OPM regulations or when carriers can demonstrate good cause such as unexpected claims experience or variations from expected community rates.

SBA is authorized to issue bond guarantees to surety companies for construction, service, and supply contracts that do not exceed $2,000,000 and to reimburse these sureties up to 90 percent of the losses sustained if the contractor defaults. SBA's guarantees provide the incentive necessary for sureties to issue bonds to small contractors who could not otherwise compete in the contracting industry.

In 2003, the budget proposes a $1.7 billion program level that is anticipated to be sufficient to accommodate demand from prior-approval and preferred sureties. This program does not require a subsidy appropriation.

As required by the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, as amended, this account records, for this program, the subsidy costs associated with the direct loans obligated and loan guarantees committed in 1992 and beyond (including modifications of direct loans or loan guarantees that resulted from obligations or commitments in any year), as well as administrative expenses of this program. The subsidy amounts are estimated on a present value basis; the administrative expenses are estimated on a cash basis.

For 2003, the budget proposes $218.5 million in new budget authority for the Business Loans Program account. This amount will be used to administer the loan programs and support 7(a) loans and $26.6 million in loans through the Microloan Direct program. For all other loan programs, borrowers fees are sufficient to cover subsidy obligations.

The Section 7(a) program provides general business credit assistance. The requested program level for 2003 is $4.85 billion. The Section 504 CDC Program is for long-term fixed rate financing and will require a program level of $4.5 billion in 2003. The Small Business Investment Companies (SBIC) program provides debt and equity capital. The budget proposes a program level of $4 billion for SBIC Participating Securities and $3 billion for SBIC Debentures. The Microloan Direct program provides loans of $35,000 or less through intermediaries.

As required by the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, as amended, this account records, for loans made pursuant to section 7(b) of the Small Business Act, as amended, the subsidy costs associated with the direct loans obligated in 1992 and beyond (including modifications of direct loans or loan guarantees that resulted from obligations or commitments in any year), as well as administrative expenses of this program. The subsidy amounts are estimated on a present value basis; the administrative expenses are estimated on a cash basis.

Disaster loans made pursuant to Section 7(b) of the Small Business Act are the primary form of Federal assistance for non-farm, private sector disaster losses. For this reason, the program is the only form of SBA assistance not limited to small businesses. Through this program, SBA helps homeowners, renters, businesses of all sizes, and non-profit organizations pay for the cost of rebuilding. Pursuant to the Small Business Act, the government subsidizes borrowers who have incurred uninsured losses or economic injury as the result of a natural disaster.

For 2003, SBA will rely on anticipated carry-over balances of $25 million from 2002 plus $10 million in recoveries to support $795 million in loans. The subsidy rate is 13.98 percent.

Title IV of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act authorizes monthly benefits to coal miners disabled from coal workers' pneumoconiosis (black lung) and to their widows and certain other dependents. SSA is responsible for processing and paying only those claims for coal miners' benefits that were filed between December 30, 1969, when the program originated, and June 30, 1973, when program administration was transferred to the Department of Labor (DOL).

This schedule reflects the effect of the Administration's proposal to transfer this program to the Department of Labor effective October 1, 2002. Since 1997, the Department has provided maintenance services to beneficiaries on behalf of SSA pursuant to an interagency agreement. However, joint SSA and DOL Office of Inspector General (OIG) audits have recommended that the program be permanently transferred from SSA to DOL. This proposal would consolidate the entire Black Lung program within a single agency, which would result in more efficient program operations and better service delivery to beneficiaries. There are no budgetary implications arising from this proposal because funding previously appropriated to SSA would be made available to DOL.

economic development in the 406 counties which comprise the Appalachian Region. Investments made throughout this 13-State Region include the building of a 3,025-mile economic development highway system and an area development program which funds economic and community development projects at the local level with a special focus on distressed counties.

Appalachian development highway system.—The Appalachian development highway system (ADHS), including local access roads, is designed to improve the accessibility of Appalachia; to reduce highway transportation costs to and within Appalachia; and to provide the highway transportation facilities necessary to accelerate the overall development of Appalachia. Studies have found the ADHS to be cost-beneficial, generating significant economic impacts.

Since FY 1999, funding for the ADHS has been provided predominantly from the Highway Trust Fund. The Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA21) authorized $2.25 billion for the construction of the ADHS and local access road projects under Section 201 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act. TEA21 authorizes $450 million annually to be appropriated out of the Highway Trust Fund for each of fiscal years 1999 through 2003. The ARC exercises programmatic and administrative control over these funds as it did when a direct appropriation was received.

The cumulative status of the system of roads follows:

*Includes TEA21 funds.

Area development program.—Area development funds are allocated by formula to the 13 member-States for projects that promote sustainable regional development, with assistance targeted at the most distressed and underdeveloped counties.

Since 1999 roughly half of all ARC program funding has supported projects benefiting such counties, which represent about one quarter of the region's total and contain roughly 10% of the region's population.

Area development funds projects which advance the goals and objectives of ARC's strategic plan. This strategic plan commits ARC to achieving five goals. These goals are (1) education and skills training, (2) physical infrastructure, (3) leadership and civic capacity, (4) diversified and entrepreneurial local economies, and (5) improved health care. The Commission has taken aggressive steps to ensure that the area development program will make progress on accomplishing these goals, to better target resources to those communities with the greatest needs, and to increase flexibility in project submission.

Each Governor submits for Commission approval an annual strategy statement detailing the areas of emphasis within the Region. All project applications submitted by the Governors address these priorities and describe the goals, objectives, and projected inputs, outputs, and outcomes. In 2003, the Commission will focus on both its system of reporting on the results of projects it funds and standardization of results measurement with those of other agencies that are engaged in similar activities.

In addition to the regular allocation of area development funds, ARC also identifies regional problems and opportunities and sets aside resources for special initiatives. The ongoing entrepreneurship initiative seeks to ensure that Appalachian communities have the commitment and resources to help entrepreneurs start and expand local businesses. To date, this initiative has funded 237 projects, providing $20 million in ARC funds and leveraging over $19 million more from other sources. Ninety-one projects that have been completed report the creation of 389 new businesses and the creation or retention of 1,283 jobs in the region. It is estimated that the 146 ongoing projects will create another 859 businesses and create or retain 2,726 jobs.

The budget provides $56 million for area development with an approximate workload as follows:

	2001 actual	2002 est.	2003 est.
Area development projects	484	485	485

Local development districts and technical assistance programs.—Multi-county local development districts (LDDs) assist local governments throughout Appalachia in planning and working together on a regional basis. LDD funding from the ARC provides a cost-share with member governments, enabling local professional staff to help plan, initiate, and implement projects at the grass roots level. Technical assistance serves to strengthen the state and local governments, LDDs and non-profit organizations in the Region. TEA21 added seven new counties to the Region, for a total of 406. This increased the number of LDDs served from 69 to 71. The budget provides $5 million for the LDDs and $1 million for technical assistance, with the approximate approved workload as follows:

Salaries and expenses.—The Federal Co-Chairman represents the Federal Government on the Commission and leads in the coordination of programs serving the Appalachian Region across the Federal Government. Since 1989, the Office of the Federal Co-Chairman has included an Inspector General.

In this Federal-State partnership, the Federal Government contributes half of the expenses of a professional staff which works with the States and the Federal staff in operating the program. The other half of these non-Federal employee expenses are provided by member States. The budget provides a total of $4 million for salaries and expenses.

The Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board (Access Board) was established by section 502 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 to ensure compliance with the Architectural Barriers Act of 1968. Since that time, the Access Board has been the only independent Federal agency whose primary mission is accessibility for people with disabilities. The Access Board has responsibility under four major pieces of legislation: the Architectural Barriers Act of 1968 (ABA); the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA); the Telecommunications Act of 1996; and section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act.

The Access Board's first major responsibility was to enforce the ABA, ensuring accessibility in facilities built, altered, or leased using certain Federal funds. In 2003, the Board will continue to process, investigate, and resolve complaints of noncompliance. The Access Board has a proven record of voluntary, amicable resolution of access issues.

Under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), the Access Board gained responsibility for two major public roles: to develop minimum accessibility guidelines for places of public accommodation, commercial facilities, State and local government facilities, and transportation vehicles and facilities, all of which are covered under the ADA; and to offer training and technical assistance to individuals and organizations throughout the country on removing architectural, transportation and communication barriers.

In pursuing these responsibilities under the ADA, the Board uses citizens' advisory committees, negotiated rule-making, and other communication channels to encourage the public's full participation in the Federal rulemaking process for developing its ADA Accessibility Guidelines (ADAAG). In addition, the Board is working with the building industry toward the development of a single set of minimum accessibility guidelines, using ADAAG as the basis.

Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended, requires that when federal departments or agencies develop, procure, maintain, or use electronic and information technology, they shall ensure that the technology is accessible to people with disabilities, unless an undue burden would be imposed on the department or agency. In the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1998 (Title IV of the Workforce Investment Act of 1998) the Board was given the responsibility to develop the standards that electronic and information technology must meet to be accessible to people with disabilities.

Consistent with the Government Performance and Results Act, (GPRA) the Access Board has adopted the following mission statement to guide its programs: The Board is the catalyst for achieving an accessible America. This statement recognizes that achieving an accessible America requires bringing together public and private sectors. The Board has established long range goals that aim to bring together public and private sectors for achieving an accessible America. The Board's long-range goals are to:

- Take a leadership role in the development of codes and standards for accessibility
- Work in partnership with Federal agencies and others to make the Federal government a model of compliance with accessibility standards
- Be known as the leading source of information about accessibility and disseminate that information to our customers in effective ways

In 2003, the Board will continue to work on its major goal of taking a leadership role in the development of codes and standards for accessibility. The board plans to complete work on guidelines for outdoor developed areas, and publish notices of proposed rulemaking on public rights-of-ways and passenger vessels. Following its second goal, the Board will continue work with other Federal agencies to identify and publicize best practices in compliance with the Architectural Barriers Act. In line with its third goal, the Board will be in position to make better use of its web pages to disseminate information to the public. Finally, the Board will continue to use its website to efficiently distribute information about compliance with section 508.

The Committee for Purchase From People Who Are Blind or Severely Disabled administers the Javits-Wagner-O'Day (JWOD) Act of 1971, as amended. Its primary objective is to use the purchasing power of the Federal Government to provide people who are blind or have other severe disabilities with employment and training that will develop and improve job skills as well as prepare them for employment options outside the JWOD Program. In 2003, the Committee's goal is to employ approximately 50,000 people who are blind or have other severe disabilities in 650 producing nonprofit agencies. The Committee's duties include promoting the program; determining which products and services are suitable for Government procurement from qualified nonprofit agencies serving people who are blind or have other severe disabilities; maintaining a procurement list of such products and services; determining the fair market price for products and services on the procurement list; and making rules and regulations necessary to carry out the purposes of the Act. In 2003 the Committee's goal is to have sales of $1.6 billion.

The Committee staff's responsibilities include promoting and assessing the overall programs; supervising the selection and assignment of new products and services; assisting in establishing prices; reviewing and adjusting these prices; verifying the qualifications of nonprofit agencies; and monitoring their performance. The increased resources proposed for 2003 would enable the Committee to continue its marketing efforts, which are essential to protecting jobs for people with disabilities involved in supplying commercial-type products such as office supplies to Federal customers under the JWOD Program. The education functions to be supported by these funds would focus on informing Federal purchase card holders about JWOD products and working with private sector distributors of those products, including e-commerce vendors.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) administers the Commodity Exchange Act of 1936, as amended. The purpose of the CFTC is to further the economic utility of the futures markets by encouraging their efficiency, assuring their integrity, and protecting participants against abusive trade practices, fraud, and deceit. The object of commodity futures trading regulation is to enable the markets to better serve their designated functions of providing a price discovery mechanism and a means of offsetting price risk. By properly serving these functions, the futures markets serve the public interest by contributing toward better planning, more efficient distribution and consumption, and more economical marketing. The commodity futures and options markets represent one of America's most innovative and competitive contributions to the international financial services industry.

The Administration proposes additional dollar resources above the fiscal year 2002 level for the Commission. These resources contribute to the Commission's ability to investigate and detect fraud and abuse and ensure the continued integrity of the commodities markets. In addition, these funds would provide the Commission with enforcement and surveillance resources to respond to the continued growth and use of complex trading and derivative instruments.

Market surveillance, analysis and research.—Responsibilities under this program include daily surveillance of the market activity of large individual traders and fundamental economic market factors to insure orderly markets. Contract terms and conditions are reviewed to insure conformity with Authorizing legislation will be proposed to establish a transactions fee on commodity futures and option contracts traded on approved exchanges to cover the cost of the Commission's regulatory activities. The collection and use of this fee, once authorized, will be contingent on appropriation action. For 2003, the fee would be effective on April 1, 2003 and be set on round turn transactions and would generate offsetting governmental collections of approximately $33 million. The authorizing legislation would in future years give appropriators the ability to adjust the fee in order to match the Commission's appropriated level. The enactment of such fee legislation would allow the Commission, the Federal government's regulator of the futures industry, to overcome past budget restraints without harming the competitive position of U.S. exchanges.

lems they identify by using the skills of individuals serving in National Service positions.

Innovation, assistance, and other activities.—This activity provides support to programs receiving assistance under AmeriCorps or Learn and Serve America or to organizations or States which would like to create programs or apply to the Corporation for funding. This activity also includes funds for challenge grants for teaching and other national service programs, where private sources provide at least 50 percent of the amount required to operate the program.

Evaluation.—This activity supports studies of the impact and effectiveness of Corporation programs.

National Civilian Community Corps.—This residential National Service program provides unique service opportunities for members and communities.

Learn and Serve America.—Through grants to State educational agencies, colleges and consortia of colleges and non-profit organizations, and other means, opportunities will be provided to students to participate in service learning activities.

NCSA program administration.—These funds will be provided to State Commissions to develop National Service plans and manage these activities within their States and will be used by the Corporation to administer these activities.

Points of Light Foundation.—A grant will be provided to this nongovernment, nonprofit 501(c)(3) entity to enable it to increase opportunities for Americans to participate in voluntary activities.

In the other, funds appropriated to make educational awards to individuals who successfully complete national service are maintained until such time as the individual uses those awards.

General programming.—The Corporation for Public Broadcasting provides grants to qualified public television and radio stations to be used at their discretion for purposes related to program production or acquisition and general operations. The Corporation also supports the production and acquisition of radio and television programs for national distribution. In addition, the Corporation assists in the financing of several system-wide activities, including national satellite interconnection services and the payment of music royalty fees, and provides limited technical assistance, research, and planning services to improve system-wide capacity and performance. By custom, the appropriation for the Corporation has been enacted two years in advance. For 2003 and 2004, appropriations of $365 million and $380 million were enacted in the 2001 and 2002 appropriations acts, respectively.

The Administration proposes that the Corporation receive appropriations like other programs that receive Federal assistance. Therefore, a 2005 funding request for the Corporation will be proposed in the FY 2005 President's Budget.

Public broadcasting assists in the educational and cultural development of our Nation. Funding for the Corporation facilitates the provision of universally available educational, non-commercial public telecommunications services that meet the needs of local communities across the country.

Digital transition.—In April 1997, the Federal Communications Commission issued regulations requiring broadcasters to transition from analog to digital broadcasting. Public broadcasters must convert to digital by May 1, 2003, with the possibility of extensions or waivers. Both the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and the Department of Commerce support public broadcasting's digital transition. Commerce Department funding will be targeted for digital transmission equipment, while the Corporation's funding will support necessary investments related to digital program production, development and distribution.

The Administration does not support the Court's proposal to lease the entire parking garage underneath the building partially occupied by the Court and to sublease parking spaces to other Federal agencies. The privately owned building is rented by the General Service Administration (GSA) on behalf of several agencies, and determinations on the leasing of parking spaces are more appropriately addressed by GSA.

The Veterans Judicial Review Act, 38 U.S.C. §§ 7251-7292 (1988) established the United States Court of Veterans Appeals (renamed United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims as of March 1, 1999, Public Law 105-368) under Article I of the United States Constitution. The Court is empowered to review decisions of the Board of Veterans' Appeals and may affirm, modify, revise, or remand a decision of the Board of Veterans' Appeals as it deems appropriate. The type of review performed by the Court is similar to that which is performed in Article III courts under the Administrative Procedure Act, title 5 U.S.C. §§ 551 et seq. In actions before it, the Court has the authority to decide all relevant questions of law, to interpret constitutional, statutory, and regulatory provisions, and to determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of an action by the Secretary of the Department of Veterans Affairs. The Court, being created by an act of Congress, may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of its jurisdiction, 28 U.S.C. § 1651.

The Court is empowered to: compel actions of the Secretary that are found to have been unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed; and set aside decisions, findings, conclusions, rules, and regulations issued or adopted by the Secretary, the Board of Veterans' Appeals, or the Chairman of the Board that are found to be arbitrary or capricious. The Court may also set aside decisions which are abuse of discretion or otherwise not in accordance with the law, contrary to constitutional right, in excess of statutory jurisdiction or authority, or without observance of the procedures required by law. In cases involving benefits under the laws administered by the Department, the Court may hold unlawful or set aside findings of material facts if the findings are clearly erroneous.

The Court's principal office location is Washington, D.C.; however, it is a national court, empowered to sit anywhere in the United States.

Pro bono program.—The Legal Services Corporation administers a grant program to provide pro bono representation and legal assistance to claimants who file appeals with the Court. Congress funds the grant program through the Court's appropriation. To maintain impartiality, the Court does not administer the program or comment on the program's budget estimate.

Practice registration fees.—38 U.S.C. § 7285 established a fund, which receives no appropriations, that will be used by the U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims to employ independent counsel to pursue disciplinary matters involving practitioners and to defray costs for the implementation of the standards of practice before the Court.

The National Capital Revitalization and Self-Government Improvement Act established the Court Services and Offender Supervision Agency for the District of Columbia as an independent Federal agency, which has assumed the District of Columbia (D.C.) pretrial services, adult probation, and parole supervision functions. The mission of the Agency is to increase public safety, prevent crime, reduce recidivism and support the fair administration of justice in close collaboration with the community. The D.C. Public Defender Service provides legal representation services within the District of Columbia, and transmits its budget with that of the Agency, yet operates as an independent District of Columbia agency, as required by law.

The Agency's budget supports the Community Supervision Program, the Pretrial Services Agency, and D.C. the Public Defender Service.

Community Supervision Program.—This activity provides supervision in the community of adult offenders on probation, parole or supervised release—consistent with a crime prevention strategy that integrates supervision, routine drug testing, treatment, and graduated sanctions. The activity also develops and provides probation and parole authorities with timely and useful information for decision-making. For 2003, $11,920,000 is requested to expand the supervision of offenders in the community, improve the quality and timeliness of diagnostic and investigative reports for probation and parole decision-makers, improve educational and vocational rehabilitative services for offenders, provide substance abuse treatment for offenders under supervision, and increase drug testing collection capabilities in community supervision offices.

Pretrial Services Agency.—This activity assists the trial and appellate levels of both the Federal and local courts in determining eligibility for pretrial release by providing background information on all arrestees. The Pretrial Services Agency is further responsible for supervising conditions of release and reporting on defendants' compliance to the court. For 2003, $1,733,000 is requested to establish a Day Reporting Center to improve and increase intensive supervision capabilities, provide additional mental health treatment and assessment services for pretrial defendants under supervision, and to improve performance management data collection.

Public Defender Service.—This activity provides legal representation to indigent defendants and provides support in the form of training, consultation and legal reference services to members of the local bar appointed as counsel in criminal, juvenile, and mental health cases involving indigent individuals. For 2003, $874,000 is requested to provide personnel, training, and support to meet the increased demand for technical expertise by defense lawyers handling DNA-based cases and to provide Constitutionally mandated legal representation to individuals facing parole revocation before the U.S. Parole Commission.

In 2003, the Court Services and Offender Supervision Agency will continue to work closely with all elements of the District of Columbia and Federal criminal justice, courts, corrections, and rehabilitation systems to improve offender supervision and court services programs, policy, and practice.

The Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board, authorized by Public Law 100-456, is responsible for evaluating the content and implementation of the standards relating to the design, construction, operation, and decommissioning of defense nuclear facilities of the Department of Energy (DOE) (as defined in Public Law 100-456). The Board also reviews the design of new DOE defense nuclear facilities and periodically reviews and monitors construction of such facilities to ensure adequate protection of public and worker health and safety. In addition, the National Defense Authorization Act for 1992 and 1993 (Public Law 102-190) expanded the Board's jurisdiction to include facilities and activities involved with the assembly, disassembly, and testing of nuclear weapons. The Board is also responsible for investigating any event or practice at a defense nuclear facility which has or may adversely affect public health and safety. The Board makes specific recommendations to the Secretary of Energy on measures that should be adopted to ensure that both public and employee health and safety are adequately protected.

Under the National Capital Revitalization and Self-Government Improvement Act of 1997, the Federal Government is required to finance the District of Columbia Courts beginning in 1998. This Federal payment to the District of Columbia Courts funds the operations of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, Superior Court and the Court System. Beginning in 1999, the Federal Government also provides funds for capital improvements. Beginning in 2000, funding for Defender Services in the District of Columbia Courts is provided through a separate account. In 2002, funding for the Family Court was provided through a separate account. Beginning in 2003, funding for the Family Court is included in the District of Columbia Courts account.

By law, the annual budget includes estimates of the expenditures for the operations of the District of Columbia Courts prepared by the Joint Committee on Judicial Administration in the District of Columbia and the President's recommendation for funding District Courts operations. The President's recommended level of $159 million includes: $127 million for District of Columbia Court of Appeals, Superior Court of the District of Columbia and the District of Columbia Court System operations; and $32 million for capital improvements for District courthouse facilities. Under a separate transmittal to Congress, the District Courts are requesting $193 million; $131 million for operations and $62 million for capital improvements.

The National Capital Revitalization and Self-Government Improvement Act of 1997, as amended (the Act), requires the Secretary of the Treasury to make payments at the end of each fiscal year, beginning in 1998, from the General Fund of the Treasury into the District of Columbia Judicial Retirement and Survivors Annuity Fund (Judicial Fund). Annual payments consist of amounts necessary to amortize: the original unfunded liability over 30 years; the net experience gain or loss over 10 years; any other changes in actuarial liability over 20 years; and amounts necessary to fund the normal cost and covered administrative expenses for the year. This account receives the annual payments from the General Fund and immediately transfers those amounts to the Judicial Fund through an expenditure transfer.

The National Capital Revitalization and Self-Government Improvement Act requires that the adult felon population of the District of Columbia be transferred to the Federal Prison System by no later than December 31, 2001. To assist in this transition, the Act established a Corrections Trustee to provide financial oversight and assistance to the District of Columbia Department of Corrections.

The last inmates were transferred out of the Lorton Correctional Complex on November 19, 2001, and the transition of District of Columbia adult felony inmates to the Federal Bureau of Prisons was completed. With the transfers, the Federal Bureau of Prisons has approximately 7,000 District of Columbia inmates in its custody.

The remaining property at the Lorton Correctional Complex will be vacated and prepared for transfer to Fairfax County during the remainder of 2002. Included in preparatory work will be the closing of the sewerage treatment plant and the removal of underground storage tanks. Continuing Lorton-based functions will be relocated from the Lorton complex. With the completion of its mission, the Corrections Trustee will terminate operations at the end of 2002.

ment, agency, or independent establishment thereof.” Each agency was to pay 25 percent of its estimated yearly bill each quarter by depositing its payment into this account. Even if all agencies did not submit payment on time, Treasury was directed to pay the Government-wide bill, making up the difference from a permanent, indefinite appropriation account, which was then to be reimbursed by the appropriate agencies.

The 2001 Consolidated Appropriations Act amended this system by repealing the permanent, indefinite appropriation account, by directing Treasury to draw down agency funds for payment of water and sewer bills, by requiring agency Inspectors General to analyze how promptly the user agency makes its payment, and by making these amendments retroactive to 1990.

2003, EEOC plans to continue the assessment of agency operations, which began during fiscal year 2002, as part of the Commission's workforce restructuring efforts. The Commission will focus on reducing management layers, ensuring that the largest number of employees is in direct service delivery positions, and retraining employees as an internal part of restructuring efforts. In the private-sector program, EEOC will expand its Alternative Dispute Resolution program and dedicate resources toward prevention of discrimination by identifying and eliminating barriers to compete in the workplace. The agency will also work to expand EEOC's coordination role for Federal civil rights employment discrimination policy among Federal agencies and at the State and local level during 2003.

The purpose of the Export-Import Bank (Eximbank) is to aid in the financing and promotion of U.S. exports. To accomplish its objectives, the bank's authority and resources are used to: assume commercial and political risks that exporters or private institutions are unwilling or unable to undertake; overcome maturity and other limitations in private sector export financing; assist U.S. exporters to meet officially sponsored foreign export credit competition; and provide leadership and guidance in export financing to the U.S. exporting and banking communities and to foreign borrowers. The bank provides its export credit support through direct loan, loan guarantee and insurance programs. The bank is actively assisting small- and medium-sized businesses.

The 2003 budget proposes $11.5 billion in lending levels, funded by a program budget of $541.4 million and administrative expenses of $68.4 million.

The 2003 program budget is a 26 percent nominal decrease from 2002. The increase in lending levels for 2003 is achieved with this request level because of a new credit risk methodology that uses more focused estimates of default risks.

Until this budget, the U.S. Government (USG) used the premium charged by private sector lenders to other governments as a proxy for the default costs of USG loans to these countries. While this was the best available method, it captured not just default risk, but also other elements, such as profits, opportunity costs, tax effects and other factors not relevant to the budget cost of USG credits. The new method isolates just the default risk portion of the private market premiums. In short, the risk of new USG international credits has not decreased, but budget costs are now based only on this default risk, not on other extraneous factors.

As required by the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, this account records, for Eximbank, the subsidy costs associated with direct loans and direct grants obligated, and loan guarantees and insurance committed in 1992 and beyond, as well as administrative expenses. The subsidy amounts are estimated on a present value basis; administrative expenses are estimated on a cash basis.

Operating results and financial condition.—The bank is a wholly owned Government corporation. Capital stock of $1 billion was purchased by the U.S. Treasury.

The bank has a reserve for possible credit losses, which provides for the risk of loss inherent in the lending process. This reserve is a general reserve, available to absorb credit losses related to the total loan portfolio. The reserve is increased by provisions charged to expenses and decreased by charge-offs, net of recoveries.

The provision for possible credit losses is based on the bank's evaluation of the adequacy of the reserve, taking into consideration a variety of factors, including repayment status of loans, future risk factors, the relationship of the reserve to the portfolio, and worldwide economic conditions. Providing for such possible losses does not imply that any loans will be written off. It simply recognizes the fact that the prospects for collection of some of the bank's loans are impaired. It does not provide for losses on a country-by-country basis and is intended only to provide an overall revaluation of the loan portfolio.

The bank's net operating income was $1,061 million in 2001. Total Government deficit in the corporation was $642 million on September 30, 2001.

The Farm Credit Administration (FCA) is an independent Federal agency that examines and regulates the Farm Credit System (System) for safety and soundness. The System is a cooperative agricultural credit system of farm credit banks and associations that lends to farmers, ranchers, and their cooperatives. Since 1990, the FCA also performs annual examinations of the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation. In addition, FCA annually examines The National Consumer Cooperative Bank and its affiliate, The NCCB Development Corporation.

As of October 1, 2001, the System was comprised of six Farm Credit Banks, one Agricultural Credit Bank, 115 associations, four service corporations, the Federal Farm Credit Bank Funding Corporation, the Farm Credit System Financial Assistance Corporation, and the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation. The Agricultural Credit Bank makes loans to agricultural, aquatic, and public utility cooperatives and other persons or organizations owned by or having transactions with such cooperatives.

Assessments based upon estimated administrative expenses are collected from institutions in the System and the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation and are available for administrative expenses. Obligations are incurred within fiscal year budgets approved by the Farm Credit Administration Board.

The Farm Credit System Financial Assistance Corporation (FAC) was created by the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987 to provide funds to System institutions experiencing financial difficulties. Authority for FAC to issue obligations and provide assistance expired in 1992, after $1.26 billion in FAC debt had been issued. Proceeds of FAC debt issuances were paid into, and amounts for assistance and other expenses were paid from, the FAC Assistance Fund. The FAC was re-classified from a Government-sponsored enterprise to a Federal entity beginning in 1993, when most of the private capital in FAC, provided by the System, was rebated from the FAC Trust Fund pursuant to the Reconciliation and Agriculture Appropriations Acts of 1989.

The Farm Credit System Insurance Corporation (Corporation) was established to ensure the timely payment of principal and interest on System debt obligations purchased by investors. The Corporation is managed by a three member Board of Directors that consists of the same members as the Farm Credit Administration Board of Directors. The Corporation derives its revenues from insurance premiums collected from insured System banks and from the investment income earned on its investment portfolio. Insurance premiums are assessed on System banks based on the level of accruing and non-accruing loans outstanding in each bank and its affiliated associations' loan portfolio. Congress established a secure base amount of 2 percent of outstanding System obligations, or such other amounts determined by its Board of Directors to be actuarially sound to maintain the Insurance Fund. The Insurance Fund was slightly below the secure base amount at September 30, 2001. Also in September, the Corporation's Board initiated premium assessments beginning in January 2002 at 3 basis points on accrual loans and 25 basis points on nonaccrual loans.

The Insurance Fund is available for payment on System obligations if an insured System bank defaults on its primary liability. The Insurance Fund is also available to ensure the timely retirement of certain eligible borrower stock, pay the operating costs of the Corporation, and satisfy defaults by System institutions on obligations issued by the FAC after amounts in the FAC Trust Fund are exhausted. The Corporation can exercise its authority to make loans, purchase System bank assets or obligations, provide other financial assistance and otherwise act to reduce its exposure to losses.

The Corporation has the authority to make refunds of excess Insurance Fund balances. No refunds are anticipated before 2006.

The Telecommunications Act of 1996 provides for a major restructuring of the Nation's communications laws, promotes universal service and open access to information networks, and provides for flexible government regulations. Under the Act, telecommunications carriers that provide interstate telecommunications services are required to contribute funds for the preservation and advancement of universal service. The contributions are used to provide services eligible for universal service support as prescribed by the FCC. Telecommunications carriers receive a credit towards their contribution by providing discount service to schools, libraries, and health care providers. Support will also be provided to carriers offering services in high cost areas of the United States and to carriers offering services to low income consumers.

This program provides for direct loans for the purpose of purchasing spectrum licenses at the Federal Communications Commission's auctions. The licenses are being purchased on an installment basis, which constitutes an extension of credit. The first year of activity for this program was 1996.

As required by the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, this account records, for this program, the subsidy costs associated with the direct loans obligated in 1992 and beyond (including modifications of direct loans or loan guarantees that resulted from obligations or commitments in any year), as well as administrative expenses of this program. The subsidy amounts are estimated on a present value basis and administrative expenses are estimated on a cash basis.

AUCTION RECEIPTS

(Legislative proposal, subject to PAYGO)

The Administration will propose legislation regarding the auction of spectrum currently assigned to television channels 60-69 (747-762 and 777-792 MHz) and 52-59 (698-746 MHz). The legislation will: shift the statutory deadline for the 60-69 auction from 2000 to 2004; shift the statutory deadline for the auction of channels 52-59 from 2002 to 2006; and promote clearing the spectrum in channels 60-69 for new wireless services in an effective and equitable manner.

ANALOG SPECTRUM LEASE FEE

(Legislative proposal, subject to PAYGO)

To facilitate clearing of the analog television broadcast spectrum and provide taxpayers some compensation for use of this scarce resource, the Administration will propose legislation authorizing the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to establish an annual $500 million lease fee on the use of analog spectrum by commercial broadcasters as of 2007. The FCC will promulgate a rulemaking to apportion the aggregate fee amount among commercial broadcasters. Upon return of its analog spectrum license to the FCC, an individual broadcaster will be exempt from the fee.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC or Corporation) was created by the Banking Act of 1933 to provide protection for bank depositors and to foster sound banking practices. The Financial Institutions Reform Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 established the Bank Insurance Fund (BIF), the Savings Association Insurance Fund (SAIF), and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) Resolution Fund (FRF). The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 generally requires the Corporation to use the least costly method to resolve failed banks, and mandates that the Corporation take prompt corrective action against under-capitalized financial institutions.

The deposit insurance ceiling protection has been $100,000 since March 31, 1980. In order to accomplish its varied functions to protect depositors, the Corporation is authorized to promulgate and enforce rules and regulations relating to the supervision of insured institutions and to perform other regulatory and supervisory duties consistent with its responsibilities as an insurer. The Corporation is required to set assessment rates for insured financial institutions semi-annually to maintain the reserves of the BIF and SAIF at 1.25 percent of total insured deposits.

The BIF, a public enterprise revolving fund, derives its income principally from insurance assessments paid by insured banks. The revolving fund represents the accumulated net income of the BIF and is reserved for the protection of depositors in insured banks, as well as for the payment of administrative and insurance expenses. As of September 2000, BIF's fund balance totaled $30 billion, excluding reserves for future failed bank resolutions. The net worth of the BIF reached 1.25 percent of total insured deposits in May 1995.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 authorizes the FDIC to borrow up to $30 billion from the Treasury to cover deposit insurance losses and provide additional loans from the Federal Financing Bank for working capital purposes. The BIF is not expected to borrow any of the $30 billion line of credit from the Treasury or from the Federal Financing Bank to finance working capital needs.

The SAIF insures depository institutions formerly insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. In July 1995, SAIF assumed responsibility for resolving failed thrifts from the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC).

The Deposit Insurance Funds Act of 1996 imposed a special assessment to bring SAIF's reserves up to 1.25 percent of insured deposits. By the end of 1998, SAIF's reserve ratio reached 1.39 percent. However, on January 1, 1999, FDIC was required by law to transfer all funds in the SAIF above 1.25 percent to a Special Reserve. Approximately $1 billion was transferred. The Gramm Leach Bliley Act of 1999 eliminated the Special Reserve. Approximately $1 billion was transferred to the SAIF on November 12, 1999. The transfer increased the reserve ratio to 1.45 percent. As of September 30, 2001, the reserve ratio was 1.39 percent.

The FSLIC Resolution Fund (FRF) is the successor to FSLIC assets and liabilities from thrift resolutions prior to August 1989. Beginning in August 1989, the RTC assumed responsibility for the FSLIC's unresolved cases. On December 31, 1995, the RTC was terminated and its assets and liabilities were transferred to FRF.

Funds for FRF operations have come from: income earned on its assets; liquidation proceeds from receiverships; the proceeds of the sale of bonds by the Financing Corporation; and, a portion of insurance premiums paid by SAIF members prior to 1993. The Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act authorizes appropriations to make up for any shortfall. The FRF will terminate upon the disposition of all its assets, and any net proceeds will be paid to the Treasury. Net proceeds from the former RTC will be paid to the Resolution Funding Corporation.

FDIC's Office of Inspector General (OIG) is an independent unit within the Corporation that conducts audits and investigations of corporate activities and assists the Corporation in preventing and detecting fraud, waste, abuse, and mismanagement. The OIG was established by the FDIC Board of Directors pursuant to the Inspector General Act amendments of 1988 (Public Law 100-504). The Resolution Trust Corporation Completion Act, enacted December 17, 1993, provided that the FDIC Inspector General be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Completion Act, thus, added FDIC to the establishments whose OIGs have separate appropriation accounts under Section 1105(a) of Title 31, United States Code. The OIG's first appropriation was for its fiscal year 1998 expenses. The OIG's appropriations are derived from the Bank Insurance Fund, the Savings Association Insurance Fund, and the FSLIC Resolution Fund.

The High Intensity Drug Trafficking Areas (HIDTA) program was established by the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, as amended, and the Office of National Drug Control Policy's reauthorization, P.L. 105-277, to provide assistance to Federal, State and local law enforcement entities operating in those areas most adversely affected by drug trafficking. Since January, 1990, counties in 28 areas have been designated as HIDTAs: New York; Los Angeles; Miami; Houston; Baltimore/Washington, DC; Puerto Rico/Virgin Islands; Southwest Border, which includes South Texas, West Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California; Chicago; Atlanta; Philadelphia/Camden; Gulf Coast (Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi); Lake County (Indiana); Midwest (Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota); Pacific Northwest (Washington); Rocky Mountain (Colorado, Utah, and Wyoming); Northern California (San Francisco Bay area); South Eastern Michigan; Appalachia (Kentucky, Tennessee, and West Virginia); Central Florida; Milwaukee; North Texas; Central Valley California; Hawaii; New England (Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Vermont); Ohio; Oregon; Northern Florida; and Nevada.

Funds made available under the HIDTA program are disbursed at the discretion of the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy for joint local, State, and Federal initiatives.

The HIDTA program provides funding to enhance and coordinate drug-control activities among State, local and Federal law enforcement agencies participating in designated High Intensity Drug Trafficking Areas. Funding for State and local law enforcement agencies is provided through grants from ONDCP. Funding for Federal agencies is provided through transfers to those agencies. All funding in the HIDTA program is awarded at the discretion of the Director of ONDCP, based on a review of drug-related threat assessments, and proposed program strategies and budgets submitted by the HIDTAs. Estimates for the 2002 and 2003 transfers to Federal agencies cannot be determined until proposed budgets for that year are reviewed.

The HIDTA appropriation also provides funding for services and activities related to auditing State and local grants and Federal transfers.

Pursuant to the Office of National Drug Control Policy Re-authorization Act of 1998 (title VII of Division C of Public Law 105-277), the Counterdrug Technology Assessment Center serves as the central counterdrug research and development organization for the United States Government.

The Center operates two programs—a Research and Development program (R&D) and a Technology Transfer program (TTP):

- The R&D program identifies law enforcement’s scientific and technological needs, coordinates Federal counterdrug R&D initiatives, supports improvements to counterdrug capabilities that transcend the need of any single Federal agency, and helps expand addiction and rehabilitation research and its associated technologies.
- The TTP provides state-of-the-art, affordable, easily integrated and maintainable tools to enhance the capabilities of State and local law enforcement agencies for counterdrug missions. The technologies transferred to State and local law enforcement agencies range from hand-held drug detection devices to major case-building computer systems.

The Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (Public Law 101-73, August 9, 1989) established the Appraisal Subcommittee of the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council. Subsequent legislation (Public Law 101-235) authorized the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development to designate a member of the Appraisal Subcommittee.

The Subcommittee is charged with ensuring that real estate appraisals used in federally-related transactions are performed in accordance with uniform standards by appraisers certified and licensed by the States. Its responsibilities include: (1) monitoring the requirements established by the States for the certification and licensing of appraisers; (2) monitoring the requirements established by the Federal financial institutions' regulatory agencies regarding appraisal standards; (3) monitoring and reviewing the practices, procedures, activities, and organization of the Appraisal Foundation; and, (4) maintaining a national registry of licensed and certified appraisers.

Subcommittee activities, including grants awarded to the Appraisal Foundation, were initially funded from a one-time appropriation of $5 million. These funds were repaid to Treasury at the end of 1998 in accordance with the Economic Growth and Regulatory Paperwork Reduction Act of 1996. The Subcommittee is now operating on fee income from state-licensed and certified real estate appraisers in the national registry.

The Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA): (1) serves as a neutral party in the settlement of disputes that arise between unions, employees, and agencies on matters outlined in the Federal Service Labor Management Relations Statute; (2) decides major policy issues; (3) prescribes regulations; and, (4) disseminates information appropriate to the needs of agencies, labor organizations, and the public. Establishment of the FLRA gives full recognition to the role of the Federal Government as an employer.

In addition, the FLRA is engaged in case-related interventions and training and facilitation of labor-management relationships in its unified Collaboration and Alternative Dispute Resolution Program. Approximately 2000 case-related intervention services were conducted in 2001. Training and facilitation workload is reflected in the following manner: the FLRA promotes labor-management cooperation by providing training and assistance to labor organizations and agencies on resolving disputes; and trains the parties on rights and responsibilities under the Federal Labor Relations Management Statute. In 2001, the FLRA conducted over 250 programs involving over 10,000 employees, union representatives, arbitrators, and other practitioners.

The FLRA is composed of the Authority, the Office of the General Counsel, and the Federal Service Impasses Panel.

Authority.—The Authority adjudicates labor-management disputes in the Federal sector including: appeals on negotiability issues; exceptions to arbitration awards; appropriate units for the purposes of exclusive recognition; eligibility of labor organizations for national consultation rights; and unfair labor practice complaints.

Within the Authority, administrative law judges hold hearings on unfair labor practice complaints, issue reports, and make recommendations to the Authority to allow timely settlement of disputes arising between agencies and unions. The Authority also provides all components with administrative services.

The Office of the Inspector General is responsible for conducting and supervising audits and investigations related to the functions of the FLRA, pursuant to the provisions of the Inspector General Act of 1978, as amended in 1988.

Case dispositions are reflected in the following table:

The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMCS or the Service) provides assistance to parties in labor disputes in industries affecting commerce through conciliation and mediation.

Dispute mediation.—The Service assists labor and management in the mediation and prevention of disputes, other than those involving rail and air transportation, whenever such disputes threaten to cause a substantial interruption of interstate commerce or a major impairment to the national defense. The Service also makes mediation and conciliation services available to Federal agencies and organizations representing Federal employees in the resolution of negotiation disputes. The Service provides mandatory mediation and, where necessary, impartial boards of inquiry to assist in resolving labor disputes involving private nonprofit health care institutions. The workload shown below includes assignments closed in both the private and public sectors.

The Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board is responsible for managing the Thrift Savings Fund (Fund). The Fund is a special tax-deferred savings fund established by the Federal Employees' Retirement System Act of 1986. Due to the fiduciary nature of the Fund, it is not included in the totals of the Federal budget. Information on the financial status and activities of the Fund follows this account.

Program administration for the Fund is financed from the Fund. Program expenses are derived first from Fund forfeitures of agency one percent automatic contributions for employees who separate from the Federal government prior to vesting and then from earnings on all participant and agency contributions to the Fund.

INFORMATION SCHEDULES FOR THE THRIFT SAVINGS FUND

The Fund is composed of individual accounts maintained by the Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board on behalf of the individual Federal employee participants in the Fund. All Federal civilian employees and members of the uniformed services are eligible to contribute to the Fund. However, only those civilian employees covered by the Federal Employees' Retirement System (or equivalent retirement systems) and a limited category of uniformed services personnel may have their contributions matched by the employing agencies in accordance with the formulas prescribed by law. Employees are entitled to select how contributions are distributed among five investment funds: a U.S. Government securities investment fund; a fixed income index investment fund; a common stock index investment fund; a small capitalization stock index investment fund; and an international stock index investment fund.

Employee participation in the Fund is entirely voluntary, so actual results could vary significantly from these estimates. The estimated status of the Fund is shown below:

the marketing of goods and services and by ensuring that consumer markets function competitively. The FTC's work is based on the belief that competition among producers, and accurate information in the hands of consumers, bring the best products and lowest prices to marketplace, spur innovation, and strengthen the economy.

Consumer protection.—The Commission is charged with eliminating unfair or deceptive acts or practices affecting commerce. The goal of the consumer protection mission is to prevent fraud, deception, and unfair business practices in the marketplace. The mission works to accomplish this goal through three objectives: (1) identify fraud, deception, and unfair practices that cause the greatest consumer injury; (2) stop fraud, deception, and unfair practices through law enforcement; and, (3) prevent consumer injury through education.

Maintaining competition.—The Commission's efforts are aimed at fostering and preserving our competitive market. The goal of the maintaining competition mission is to prevent anticompetitive mergers and other anticompetitive business practices in the marketplace. The mission works to accomplish this goal through three objectives: (1) identify anticompetitive mergers and practices that cause the greatest consumer injury; (2) stop anticompetitive mergers and practices through law enforcement; and, (3) prevent consumer injury through education.

The President's 2003 request will fund a total 1,080 FTE, which includes 6 reimbursable FTE. The program level for the Commission will increase from $155,982,000 in 2002 to $176,509,000 in 2003, allowing the Commission to maintain the current performance of its missions. The 2003 requested program level will be fully funded by offsetting collections from two sources: Hart-Scott-Rodino Act premerger notification filings as authorized by 18 U.S.C. 18a; and new fees that will be assessed, collected and used to cover costs of developing, implementing and maintaining a national database of telephone numbers of consumers who choose not to receive telephone solicitations, as authorized by the Telephone Consumer and Abuse Prevention Act (15 U.S.C. 6101, et seq., as amended).

The Intelligence Community Management Account (ICMA) was established by Congressional direction to provide resources that directly support the Director of Central Intelligence (DCI) and the Intelligence Community as a whole in coordinating cross-program activities, improving budget oversight, and strengthening Community Management. The ICMA includes the Community Management Staff, the National Intelligence Council, the Center for Security Evaluations, the Advanced Research and Development program, the National Counterintelligence Executive, and the National Drug Intelligence Center.

The Community Management Staff is the DCI's principal source of advice and assistance in planning and executing his intelligence community management responsibilities. These include: developing the National Foreign Intelligence Program budget; developing intelligence plans and requirements; and overseeing research and development activities. The Advanced Research and Development program is responsible for coordination of advanced technology within the Intelligence Community and for encouragement of investment in high risk/high return technologies. The National Intelligence Council provides analytical support to the DCI and national policy makers. The Center for Security Evaluation is responsible for evaluating and improving security capabilities at United States embassies. The National Counterintelligence Executive was established as the primary mechanism to coordinate U.S. government national-level counterintelligence policy and activities. The National Drug Intelligence Center was established to coordinate strategic organizational drug intelligence from national security and law enforcement agencies.

The U.S. International Trade Commission is an independent, quasi-judicial federal agency established by Congress with a wide range of trade-related mandates. The mission of the Commission is twofold: administer U.S. trade remedy laws in a fair and objective manner; and provide the President, the United States Trade Representative, and the Congress with independent, quality advice and information on matters of international trade and competitiveness.

For 2003, the Commission requests an appropriation of $56 million in order to fund existing mandated investigative activity and related operations, a mandatory 4.6 percent pay increase, and information technology projects that are designed to improve electronic transaction capability, provide broader public access to public data and other information, develop more timely and accurate trade information for the trade community, and improve transparency in the Commission's procedures and finances. The 2003 request represents a 5.4 percent increase over its 2002 funding availability of $53 million and a 7.9 percent increase over the 2002 appropriation of $51 million.

In September 2001, the Commission issued the fourth edition of its Strategic Plan and is currently implementing the 2002 Performance Plan. For the purpose of developing the Strategic Plan, the Commission's functions were divided into five operations and, in order to facilitate the linkage of financial resources to the achievement of strategic goals, the budget justification is structured in the same manner. There are 19 strategic goals for the five operations. In 2000 and 2001 these goals were met in virtually all instances.

As presented in the Commission's Strategic Plan, there are five major operations that serve the Commission's external customers:

- Import Injury Investigations: These cover the conduct of the Commission's countervailing duty, antidumping, and sunset review investigations (collectively known as Title VII investigations), safeguards and market disruption investigations, and appellate litigation of challenges to the Commission's determinations.

- Intellectual Property-Based Import Investigations: These cover the conduct of the Commission's adjudicatory investigations (referred to as section 337 investigations) regarding alleged unfair methods of competition and unfair acts in the importation of goods into the United States and most frequently involve allegations of patent or trademark infringement.

- Research: This covers all activities related to the acquisition, maintenance, and application of analytical and technical trade expertise. This expertise is applied through studies regarding the performance and global competitiveness of various U.S. industries, the impact of changes in trade policy on the overall economy or subsets thereof, trade and competitiveness issues, and the probable economic effect of tariff reductions and trade agreements.

- Trade Information Services: This covers a wide range of activities that provide Commission staff, the Congress, the Executive Branch, and the general public with reliable and timely trade information and analysis. These activities include work on legislative reports for Congress, the maintenance and publication of Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States, maintenance of a tariff and trade database (Dataweb), and library services. Also included within this operation is the development of trade data compilations tailored for use by U.S. negotiators, and nomenclature expertise and related assistance to U.S. trade negotiating delegations (principally to the World Trade Organization and the World Customs Organization) as well as Congressional staff.

- Trade Policy Support: This covers direct support activities for policy makers such as the provision of technical expertise and objective information on trade issues to congressional committees and members' offices, the United States Trade Representative, interagency committees, and U.S. delegations to multilateral organizations.

All of these operations define the output of the Commission, emphasizing the benefits that the Commission provides in facilitating an open trading system based on the rule of law and economic self-interest. Within each operation, specific critical success indicators and strategic goals are identified. The Commission's Strategic Plan, Performance Plan, and Performance Report are available at <http://www.usitc.gov>.

Pursuant to section 175 of the Trade Act of 1974, the budget estimates for the Commission are transmitted to Congress without revision by the President.

Public Laws 99-500, 101-208, and 102-221 established the James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation to operate a fellowship program to encourage graduate study of the framing, principles, and history of the American Constitution. Appropriations of $10 million in 1988 and 1989 established the foundation's trust fund. The funds have been invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in U.S. Treasury securities, and the interest earned on these funds is available for carrying out the activities of the foundation. Funds raised from private sources and the surcharges from commemorative coin sales are also placed in the trust fund.

The foundation is authorized to award graduate fellowships of up to $24,000 to high school teachers of American history, American government, and social studies. College seniors and recent college graduates who want to become secondary school teachers of these subjects are also eligible.

Fellowship awards.—This activity is comprised of fellowship awards to cover educational expenses. It also supports the foundation's annual Summer Institute on the U.S. Constitution, which all current fellows are required to attend. The Institute is an intensive educational experience that will ensure that all fellows know the history of the framing, ratification, and implementation of the U.S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights. The foundation awarded 61 fellowships in 2001 and plans to award at least 65 in both 2002 and 2003.

Program administration.—This activity covers the costs of planning, fund-raising, and the operation of the fellowship program.

Established by the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, the Board serves as guardian of the Federal Government's merit-based system of employment, principally by hearing and deciding appeals from Federal employees of removals and other major personnel actions. The Board also hears and decides other types of civil service cases, reviews regulations of the Office of Personnel Management, and conducts studies of the merit systems. The intended results (outcomes) of MSPB's efforts are to assure that (1) personnel actions taken involving employees are processed within the law, and (2) actions taken by OPM and other agencies support and enhance Federal merit principles.

The number of decisions issued by the Board is shown in the following table:

The U.S. Institute for Environmental Conflict Resolution is a Federal program established by P.L. 105-156 to assist parties in resolving environmental, natural resource, and public lands conflicts. The Institute is part of the Morris K. Udall Foundation, and serves as an impartial, non-partisan institution providing professional expertise, services, and resources to all parties involved in such disputes. The Institute helps parties determine whether collaborative problem solving is appropriate for specific environmental conflicts, how and when to bring all the parties to the table, and whether a third-party facilitator or mediator might be helpful in assisting the parties in their efforts to reach consensus or to resolve the conflict. In addition, the Institute maintains a roster of qualified facilitators and mediators with substantial experience in environmental conflict resolution, and can help parties in selecting an appropriate neutral. (See www.ecr.gov for more information about the Institute.)

Public Law 102-259 established the Morris K. Udall Scholarship and Excellence in National Environmental Policy Foundation to provide educational resources to promote studies in the natural environment and Native American public health and tribal policy.

In 2001, the Foundation awarded 80 undergraduate scholarships. Eleven Native American Congressional Summer Internship Program recipients spent ten weeks in Congressional offices and the White House participating in a program created by the Udall Foundation. For the fifth year, the Foundation awarded two Graduate Fellowships to Ph.D. candidates whose dissertation topics were in the area of environmental public policy and conflict resolution and whose work contributed to the mission of the Foundation.

In 2002 and 2003, the Foundation will maintain its current level of scholarships, fellowships and internships.

The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) provides for basic operations dealing with management of the Government's archives and records, operation of Presidential Libraries, and for the review for declassification of classified security information.

Records services.—This activity provides for selecting, preserving, describing, and making available to the general public, scholars, and Federal agencies the permanently valuable historical records of the Federal Government; the historical materials and Presidential records in Presidential Libraries; for preparing related publications and exhibit programs; and for conducting the appraisal of all Federal records.

Through the records declassification program, historically valuable information in the records of the Federal Government and in donated historical materials are made available to the public by declassifying as much information as possible without endangering the national security.

This activity also provides oversight for the information security program established by Executive Order 12958 as amended by Executive Order 13142 and reports annually to the President on the status of that program. It is also responsible for policy oversight for the National Industrial Security Program established under Executive Order 12829.

NARA, in research and development collaboration with national and international partners, is building an Electronic Records Archives (ERA) that will ensure the preservation of and access to Government electronic records. The pace of technological progress makes formats in which the records are stored obsolete within a few years, threatening to make them inaccessible even if they are preserved intact. ERA will preserve electronic records, regardless of the original format, retain them indefinitely, and enable requesters to access them on computer systems now and in the future. In 2003, NARA will also continue work on the Electronic Records Management (ERM) initiative. The ERM will compliment the ERA research by piloting government-wide procedures and standards for managing electronic records.

Archives related services.—This activity provides for the publication of the Federal Register, the Code of Federal Regulations, the U.S. Statutes-at-Large, and Presidential documents, and for a program to improve the quality of regulations and the public's access to them.

This activity also includes the administration and reference services portion for the National Historical Publications and Records Commission. This Commission makes grants nationwide to preserve and publish records that document American history.

Archives II facility.—Provides for construction and related services of the new archival facility which was opened to the public in 1993. Costs of construction are financed by $302 million of federally guaranteed debt issued in 1989. Since 1994 and continuing in 2003, the Archives seeks appropriations for the annual payments for interest and redemption of debt to be made under the contract for construction and related services.

Homeland security information sharing.—$7 million will be allocated for training personnel at the state and local level in the proper use and handling of classified and sensitive but unclassified homeland security information. Funding will also be used to facilitate security clearances for appropriate individuals at the state and local level, and to ensure that Federal agencies have the necessary classification authority for homeland security information.

This account provides for the repair, alteration, and improvement of Archives facilities and Presidential Libraries nationwide, and provides adequate storage for holdings. It will better enable the National Archives to maintain its facilities in proper condition for public visitors, researchers, and employees in NARA facilities, and also maintain the structural integrity of the buildings. Funding requested in 2003 will determine appropriate options for preserving and providing access to 20th century military service records. These funds will allow NARA to complete preliminary design studies and analysis, including work flow and cost estimates, for housing and access options for these massive and valuable records. Technology and facility approaches will be examined. Funding is also requested to assist with the repair of the plaza adjacent to the Lyndon Baines Johnson Presidential Library. This plaza is in need of critical repair due to water damage.

The Commission has been responsible for developing plans and recommendations for meeting the library and information needs of the Nation, for coordinating Federal, State, and local activities to meet these needs, for advising the President and the Congress on implementation of national and international library and information services policies, and for providing advice on general policies about library services under the Museum and Library Services Act.

The Administration requests no funding for this agency in 2003. The Administration believes that other agencies can take on the responsibilities of the Commission that continue to be necessary. Its other activities have failed to demonstrate that their results justify their costs.

The insurance fund is used to carry out a program of insurance for member accounts in Federal credit unions and State-chartered credit unions which apply and qualify for insurance, authorized by Public Law 91-468, enacted October 19, 1970.

Budget program.—The activities consist of: (a) providing member account insurance, (b) formulating standards and requirements for insured credit unions, and (c) providing for liquidation or other disposition of the assets and liabilities of solvent and insolvent insured credit unions. The fund also reimburses the operating fund for its share of the Agency's administrative costs. The reimbursement percentage, which is reviewed and adjusted periodically, is currently at 66.72 percent for 2001, and will be 62 percent for 2002.

The extent of the program is estimated as follows:

Item:	2001 actual	2002 est.	2003 est.
Number of insured credit unions	10,145	9,841	9,545
Insured shares of member institutions as of June 30 (in millions of dollars)	$386,624	$402,089	$418,173

It is estimated that approximately 3,914 State-chartered credit unions will be enrolled in the program by the end of 2002.

Financing.—For insurance year 2001 there was no annual insurance premium assessment. As a result of Public Law 98-369 (July 18, 1984), each insured credit union is also required to deposit and maintain in the insurance fund 1 percent of its member share accounts. The fund is structured to be entirely self supporting through the monies paid by member credit unions. The monies received plus the income generated from their investment are expected to cover all administrative and financial costs, as well as increase the fund balance proportionate to insured share growth. In 2001 the income generated from the 1 percent deposit eliminated the need to assess a premium. The fund has $100 million in borrowing authority from the Treasury for use in unforeseen emergencies. The reserve requirement was changed in 2000 due to the provisions of the Credit Union Membership Access Act (P.L. 105-219), which requires the normal operating level, an equity ratio specified by the Board, to be not less than 1.2 percent and not more than 1.5 percent. For 2001, the Board set the normal operating level at 1.3 percent prior to the beginning of the calendar year.

Operating results.—Anticipated net income of $175 million will be retained in the fund, raising the balance to $5.3 billion by the end of 2002.

The National Credit Union Central Liquidity Facility was established under Public Law 95-630. It began operations on October 1, 1979. The Central Liquidity Facility provides loans to member credit unions for seasonal and emergency needs.

The two primary sources of funds for the Facility are stock subscriptions from credit unions and borrowings from the Federal Financing Bank. Credit unions, which choose to become members of the Facility, are required to purchase stock equal to one-half of 1 percent of their assets. One-half of the subscription in stock is forwarded to the Facility and deposited in the fund. The remaining half of the subscription remains on call in the credit union in investments as approved by the NCUA Board.

The National Endowment for the Arts provides grants to, or contracts with, groups, individuals of exceptional talent in specified fields, and State or regional organizations engaged in or concerned with the arts in service to the American public. Programs encourage individual and institutional development of the arts, education in the arts, preservation of America's artistic heritage, wider availability and appreciation of the arts, leadership in the arts, and the stimulation of non-Federal sources of support for the Nation's artistic activities.

This presentation includes Gifts and Donations and the Arts and Artifacts Indemnity Fund which previously had been shown separately.

The National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965, as amended, authorizes the Arts Endowment to receive money and other donated property. Such gifts may be used, sold, or otherwise disposed of to support arts projects and activities. Budget authority in this schedule reflects cash received each year by the Arts Endowment.

The Arts and Artifacts Indemnity Act of 1975, as amended authorizes the Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities to enter into indemnity agreements to cover certain eligible works of art while on traveling exhibition in the United States or abroad. Loss or damage claims certified by the Council are paid from this fund.

The National Endowment for the Humanities supports educational and scholarly activities in the humanities, the preservation of America's cultural and intellectual resources, and opportunities for Americans to engage in lifelong learning in the humanities. In 2003, the NEH will continue with important activities including partnerships with State humanities councils, efforts to preserve brittle books and serials, the strengthening of humanities teaching and learning, and museum exhibitions, documentary media projects, and reading programs that reach popular audiences. The Endowment will also strengthen its efforts to collect, analyze, and disseminate information on the state of the humanities.

Support is provided through outright grants, matching grants, and a combination of the two. Eligible applicants include state humanities councils, schools, higher education institutions, libraries, museums, historical organizations, professional associations, other cultural institutions, and individuals.

This presentation also includes the Gifts and Donations account. The National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965, as amended, authorizes the Humanities Endowment to receive money and other donated property. Such gifts may be used, sold, or otherwise disposed of to support humanities projects and activities. Budget authority in this schedule reflects cash received each year by the Endowment.

The President's Budget includes a $10 million initiative in National leadership grants to recruit and train librarians. The budget does not continue funding for congressionally-designated special interest projects.

State formula grants are made to assist public libraries in improving library services, promoting access to learning and information resources to users of all ages, to promote wider access to information through technology, and to support collaborative activities between museums and libraries. National leadership grants provide incentives through a national competition for libraries, either individually or in collaboration with partner organizations, to develop model programs, identify best practices to improve information access and services, and disseminate their findings.

Field investigation.—Charges of unfair labor practices and petitions for elections to resolve representation disputes are investigated by regional office personnel. Ninety-five percent of the unfair labor practice cases and 85 percent of the representation cases are closed by settlement, dismissal, or withdrawal. The remainder are prepared for public hearing. The agency strives to maximize the voluntary settlement of all cases and to avoid litigation.

Administrative law judge hearing.—Administrative law judges conduct public hearings in unfair labor practice cases. Their findings and recommendations are set forth in their decisions.

Board adjudication.—In an unfair labor practice case, a judge's decision becomes a Board order if no exceptions are filed. About 30 percent of these decisions become automatic Board orders or are complied with voluntarily. The remainder, with exceptions filed, requires contested Board decision. In representation cases, regional directors initially decide the issues by Board delegation. The Board itself decides representation issues on referral from regional directors or by granting a request for review of a regional director's decision. The Board also rules on objection and challenge questions in election cases.

Securing compliance with Board orders.—If the parties do not voluntarily comply with the Board's order involving unfair labor practices, the Board must request that the appellate courts enforce its decisions.

Mediator and alternative dispute resolution (ADR) services.—The Board mediates disputes over wages, hours, and working conditions for some 746 rail and air carriers and approximately 795,000 employees in the two industries.

The Board also provides technical assistance to enable labor and industry representatives to explore informally the relevant economic and noneconomic problems that condition collective bargaining in the railroad and airline industries. The Board's ADR program provides collective bargaining training, facilitation, and grievance mediation services to the labor-management community.

Emergency disputes.—When the parties fail to resolve their disputes through mediation, they are urged to submit their differences to arbitration. If neither mediation nor voluntary arbitration is successful, the President, when notified of disputes which substantially threaten to interrupt essential service, may appoint emergency boards to investigate and report on the dispute. Such reports usually serve as a basis for resolving the disputes.

The Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (P.L. 102-29) amended the Railway Labor Act (RLA) by adding a new emergency dispute procedure covering disputes between a publicly funded and operated commuter carrier and its employees. The 1981 Act requires the Board to appoint the public members of factfinding panels on Conrail.

Arbitration under sections 3 and 7 of the RLA.—Railroad employee grievances resulting from disputes over the interpretation or application of collective bargaining contracts may be brought for settlement to the National Railroad Adjustment Board (NRAB). The divisions of the Board are composed of an equal number of carrier and union representatives compensated by the party or parties they represent. Public Law 89-456 provides for the adjustment of disputes involving grievances resulting from interpretation or application of bargaining agreements in the railroad industry otherwise referable to the NRAB.

Administrative direction and support for the public law boards, special boards of adjustment, and the NRAB are provided by Federal employees who are compensated by the National Mediation Board.

The National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB), as an independent nonregulatory agency, is charged with promoting transportation safety through the investigation of accidents, the conduct of special studies, the development of recommendations to prevent accidents, the evaluation of the effectiveness of other Government agencies in preventing transportation accidents, and the review of appeals of adverse certificate and civil penalty actions taken by the Administrators of agencies of the Department of Transportation involving airman and seaman certificates and licenses.

The National Transportation Safety Board is mandated by Congress to investigate all catastrophic transportation accidents and, therefore, has no control over the frequency of costly accident investigations. The emergency fund provides a funding mechanism by which periodic accident investigation cost fluctuations can be met without delaying critical phases of the investigations. The current balance of $2 million is sufficient to cover unanticipated costs associated with an increased number of accidents, and thus the Administration does not propose new funding in 2003.

The National Veterans Business Development Corporation (NVBDC) has undertaken a variety of initiatives to fulfill its mandate under P.L. 106-50. It has hired a permanent CEO and President, Major General Charles R. Henry USA (Ret), and the President has appointed the ninth, and final member of NVBDC's Board of Directors.

With its infrastructure in place, NVBDC has begun to perform outreach activities to the nation's veterans, and others, by building a world class web site. The web site will be an informational clearing house that will enable a veteran to access entrepreneurial training and technical assistance services offered by all levels of government, the private sector, community-based organizations, trade associations, and like organizations. It is also investigating partnerships with the private sector to offer veteran entrepreneurs opportunities to pursue government and private sector contracts and to sell their goods and services to each other in a secure electronic environment.

Concurrently, NVBDC is energetically pursuing a variety of paths to financial self-sufficiency. For example, it is investigating the potential for creating a venture capital fund. It has also defined separate areas for fundraising activities; individual contributions, corporate contributions, foundation contributions, events and targeted meetings with potential contributors across the country, direct mail and web site contributions.

Furthermore, NVBDC is continuing to build partnerships, and conduct outreach activities, with Federal departments and agencies, veterans serving organizations, community-based organizations, and private sector corporations.

Nuclear Reactor Safety.—A major part of the NRC's mission is to ensure that its licensees design, construct, and operate civilian reactor facilities safely. The Atomic Energy Act and the Energy Reorganization Act provide the foundation for regulating the Nation's civilian nuclear power industry. Nuclear reactor safety encompasses all NRC efforts to ensure that civilian nuclear reactor facilities and non-power reactors are operated in a manner that provides adequate protection of public health and safety and the environment, and protects against radiological sabotage and theft or diversion of special nuclear materials. These efforts include reactor licensing; reactor license renewal; operator licensing; financial assurance; inspection; performance assessment; identification and resolution of safety issues; reactor regulatory research; regulation development; operating experience evaluation; incident investigation; threat assessment; emergency response; investigation of alleged wrong doing by licensees, applicants, contractors, or vendors; imposition of enforcement sanctions for violations of NRC requirements; and reactor technical and regulatory training. In light of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, NRC will perform a comprehensive review of our security and safeguards program for civilian reactor facilities.

Nuclear Materials Safety.—Nuclear materials safety encompasses all NRC efforts to ensure that NRC-regulation aspects of nuclear fuel cycle facilities and nuclear materials activities are handled in a manner that provides adequate protection of public health and safety. These efforts include, licensing/certification, inspection, and enforcement activities; regulation and guidance development; nuclear materials research; identification and resolution of safety and safeguard issues; operating experience evaluation; incident investigation; threat assessment; emergency response; technical training; and investigation of alleged wrongdoing by licensees, applicants, certificate holders, contractors and vendors. In light of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, NRC will perform a comprehensive review of our security and safeguards program for nuclear fuel cycle facilities and nuclear materials activities.

Nuclear Waste Safety.—Nuclear waste safety encompasses the NRC's high-level waste regulatory activities associated with high-level waste disposal at the potential Yucca Mountain repository as mandated by the Nuclear Waste Policy Act, the Nuclear Waste Policy Amendments Act, and; the Energy Policy Act; NRC regulatory and oversight activities for decommissioning, which involves safely removing a facility from service and reducing residual radiation to a level that permits the property to be released for unrestricted or restricted use; the safe and secure storage and transportation of radioactive materials through the certification of spent fuel storage containers and transportation packages. Low-level radioactive waste activities associated with the disposal of waste are addressed in accordance with the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act. In light of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, NRC will perform a comprehensive review of our security and safeguards program for decommissioning reactors, spent fuel storage installations, and transportation of waste.

International Nuclear Safety Support.—International Nuclear Safety Support encompasses NRC international activities, including some that support the agency's domestic mission and others that support broader U.S. national interests. These activities include international policy formulation, export-import licensing of nuclear materials and equipment, treaty implementation, international information exchange activities, international safety and safeguards assistance, and deterring nuclear proliferation.

Management and Support.—Management and support encompasses NRC central policy direction, legal advice for the Commission, analysis of long-term policy issues, administrative proceedings review and advice, liaison with outside constituents and other government agencies, financial management, all administrative and logistical support, information resources management, executive management services for the Commission, personnel and training, and matters involving small and disadvantaged businesses and civil rights. In light of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, NRC will continue to review and strengthen NRC's physical facilities and information technology infrastructure.

The Office of Special Counsel (OSC) (1) investigates Federal employee allegations of prohibited personnel practices (including reprisal for whistleblowing) and when appropriate prosecutes before the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB); (2) provides a channel for whistleblowing by Federal employees; and (3) enforces the Hatch Act. The OSC may transmit whistleblower allegations to the agency head concerned and require an agency investigation and a report to the Congress and the President when appropriate.

Overall in 2001, there were more than 3,107 instances in which the assistance or action of the OSC was sought by Federal employees and other persons. Many prohibited personnel practice cases investigated by the OSC are resolved without recourse to formal proceedings before the MSPB. In 2001, the OSC obtained 76 corrective or other favorable actions, and efforts to obtain such negotiated resolutions will continue. In 2001, the OSC also filed eight enforcement actions before the MSPB Hatch Act matters. The OSC also issued 2,806 Hatch Act advisory opinions (both written and oral) to people who sought advice. During 2001, the OSC's Disclosure Unit received 380 new disclosure matters for possible referral and 15 Disclosure Unit matters were referred to agency heads for their review.

This request will enable OSC to continue its efforts to reduce its long-standing case processing backlogs. In 2001, OSC made some progress against these backlogs in reducing the number of pending prohibited personnel practice cases older than 240 days by 15 percent. OSC anticipates making more progress in 2003 so as to reduce backlogs and provide customers with prompt and timely service in accordance with the time frames laid out in 5 U.S.C. § 1214(b)(2)(A)(ii) (240 days to process prohibited personnel practice complaints) and 5 U.S.C. § 1213(b) (15 days to make an initial determination on a whistleblower disclosure).

OSC significantly revised its Strategic Plan last year, including the associated annual performance plan. The plans now place more emphasis on prioritizing cases by category and resource allocation, while improving quality. Highlights of the FY 2003 annual performance plan include: (1) implementing a procedure to assess and improve quality of OSC investigations and legal analyses; (2) devising a formal system of case handling and resource allocation according to complexity and type of case; (3) developing a system to eliminate any unnecessary steps in case-handling; (4) creating specific performance goals for the Hatch Act and Disclosure Units; (5) enhancing goals for OSC's outreach and education program; and (6) maintaining OSC's human resource and information technology programs.

On November 20, 2001 the President released (pursuant to P.L. 107-38) $175,000,000 from the Emergency Response Fund to the U.S. Postal Service in response to the anthrax attacks. These resources include $100 million for an initial purchase of irradiation equipment to sanitize the mail and $75 million for the costs of personnel protection equipment (gloves, masks, barrier creams, etc.), first response/environmental testing kits and services, site clean-up and medical goods and services, and for public education material.

In the Emergency Supplemental Act of 2002, Congress appropriated, from amounts authorized by Public Law 107-38, an additional $500,000,000 to the Postal Service to protect postal employees and postal customers from exposure to bio-hazardous material, sanitize and screen the mail, and replace or repair Postal Service facilities destroyed or damaged in New York City as a result of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. Funds are available to the Postal Service for sanitizing and screening the mail after it submits an emergency preparedness plan and an associated expenditure plan to the Congress.

Pursuant to Public Law 93-328, the 2003 appropriation request of the U.S. Postal Service for Payment to the Postal Service Fund is $60,014,000. This amount includes: $48,999,000 requested for free mail for the blind and overseas voting; -$17,985,000 as a reconciliation adjustment for 2000 actual mail volume of free mail for the blind and overseas voting; and $29,000,000 for prior years' liability under the Revenue Forgone Reform Act of 1993. In addition to these funds, $47,619,000 (an advance appropriation from 2002 for the 2002 costs and the 1999 reconciliation adjustment for free mail for the blind and overseas voting) will become available to the U.S. Postal Service in 2003.

The Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, Public Law 91-375, converted the Post Office Department into the U.S. Postal Service, an independent establishment within the executive branch. The Postal Service commenced operations July 1, 1971. This agency is charged with providing patrons with reliable mail service at reasonable rates and fees.

The U.S. Postal Service is governed by an 11-member Board of Governors, including 9 Governors appointed by the President, a Postmaster General who is selected by the Governors, and a Deputy Postmaster General who is selected by the Governors and the Postmaster General.

Decisions on changes in domestic rates of postage and fees for postal services are recommended to the Governors of the Postal Service by the independent Postal Rate Commission after a hearing on the record under the Administrative Procedure Act. The Commission also recommends decisions on changes in the domestic mail classification schedule to the Governors. Decisions of the Governors on rates of postage, fees for postal services, and mail classification are final, subject to judicial review.

Effective in 1986, the Postal Service Fund (Fund) was included in the congressional and executive budget process and taken into account in making calculations under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Gramm-Rudman-Hollings). The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 amended title 39 of the U.S. Code by adding a new section, 2009a, which provides that, beginning in 1990, the receipts and disbursements of the Fund shall not be considered as part of the congressional and executive budget process and shall not be taken into account in making calculations under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

Programs.—Included are all postal activities providing window services; processing, delivery, and transportation of mail; research and development; administration of postal field activities; and associated expenses of providing facilities and financing.

The rapid development of electronic messaging systems promises to increase the effectiveness of the Nation's communications infrastructure and United States competitiveness in the future. As the provider of a universally available hard copy delivery system, the United States Postal Service is encouraged to examine these emerging communications technologies and to cooperate with the private sector on issues of integration, directory service, and strategic alliances that will facilitate the development of secure and reliable electronic messaging networks.

The transition from hard copy to electronic messaging already has begun. The Postal Service should assist in developing future messaging systems. The Postal Service's participation should recognize the changing needs of its business, governmental, and individual customers; should focus on determining an appropriate means for public and private sector cooperation; and should be consistent with the agency's vision of evolving into a premier provider of 21st century postal communications. The Postal Service should seek to leverage its comprehensive delivery, messaging security, and addressing directory management capabilities in a manner that promotes universal access to the benefits of these new technologies for all citizens who desire them.

Financing.—The activities of the U.S. Postal Service are financed from the following sources: (1) mail and services revenue; (2) reimbursements from Federal and non-Federal sources; (3) proceeds from borrowing; (4) interest from U.S. securities and other investments; and (5) appropriations by the Congress. All receipts and deposits are made to the Postal Service Fund and are available without fiscal year limitation for payment of all expenses incurred, retirement of obligations, investment in capital assets, and investment in obligations and securities.

Separate legislation also increased the Postal Service's statutory borrowing authority beginning in 1991. Section 2005 of title 39, United States Code, as amended, increased the Postal Service's borrowing authority by $2.5 billion in 1991 for a revised ceiling of $12.5 billion and an additional $2.5 billion in 1992 for a revised total ceiling of $15 billion. The total net increase in amounts outstanding in any one fiscal year were also increased and now may not exceed $2.0 billion in obligations issued for the purpose of capital improvements and $1.0 billion for the purpose of paying operating expenses. As of September 30, 2003, it is expected that the total debt instruments issued and outstanding pursuant to this authority will amount to $11.465 billion.

Operating.—Estimated revenue will total approximately $74.8 billion in 2003. This includes $74.7 billion from mail and services revenue, $27 million from investment income, and $31 million for revenue foregone appropriations in 2003. Total expenses are estimated at approximately $74.2 billion in 2003.

The Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 established the Postal Service as a fully self-sufficient, independent entity. Postal revenues were to cover the full costs of postal operations. When the Act was passed, the Postal Service received substantial taxpayer subsidies, both appropriated and unappropriated. Consistent with the intent of the 1970 Act, Congress has taken steps over time to reduce these subsidies. Under the 1974 Civil Service Retirement Fund—Postal Employee Benefits Act, the Postal Service assumed responsibility for paying unfunded retirement costs from wage schedule increases under postal labor contracts. These costs are not covered by normal employee/employer contributions to the retirement fund. The 1985 Reconciliation Act shifted responsibility for paying health benefit costs of Postal annuitants retiring after 1986 from OPM to the Postal Service. The 1987 Reconciliation Act had the Postal Service make one-time payments to defray annuitant health benefit costs in 1988 and 1989 and retirement COLA costs in 1988. (Retirement COLAs, like wage schedule increases, result in retirement liabilities not covered by normal retirement fund contributions.) Under the 1989 Reconciliation Act, the Postal Service assumed responsibility for paying health benefits of survivors of post-86 annuitants and unfunded retirement COLA liabilities for post-86 annuitants.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 superseded certain existing legislation and expanded the Postal Service's responsibility for benefit costs of postal annuitants. Effective October 1, 1990, the Postal Service is required to fund Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS) COLAs and the employer's share of Federal Employees Health Benefits Program (FEHBP) premiums for postal annuitants who retired after June 30, 1971, and their survivors. In addition, the Postal Service is required to fund the retroactive CSRS COLA and FEHBP premium costs for which the Postal Service would have been liable if the provisions of this new legislation had been in effect as of July 1, 1971.

Under the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1993, the Postal Service was required to make certain payments for past COLAs and health benefits, over and above any other payments required by law, of $693 million to the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund, and $348 million to the Employees Health Benefits Fund. These two payments were made in three equal annual installments, beginning in fiscal year 1996.

The Revenue Forgone Reform Act of 1993 phased-in higher postage rates for preferred mailers during 1994 through 1999. As reimbursement for the additional revenues not collected by the Postal Service during this phase-in period and for insufficient amounts appropriated for forgone revenues on various mail classes during 1991 through 1993, the Act authorized $1.218 billion to be paid in installments of $29 million annually from 1994 through 2035. Congress has appropriated $29 million annually since 1994. As of September 30, 2002, $957 million remains to be paid—in annual increments of $29 million over the next 33 years—to the Postal Service under this Act.

The Balanced Budget Act of 1997 repealed the authorization for transitional appropriations to the Postal Service which had funded the liabilities of the former Post Office Department to the Employees' Compensation Fund. Effective October 1, 1997, these liabilities became liabilities of the Postal Service payable out of the Postal Service Fund.

⁴The slowing of the economy coupled with the impact of the events of September 11 and the subsequent use of the mail as a vehicle for bio-terrorism will result in costs and negative business impacts, the magnitude of which is unknown at this time. Due to a current inability to assess the financial impact of these events, this submission reflects assumptions included in Postal Service rate case docket number R2001-1, filed on September 24, 2001, and reflecting pre-September 11th estimates. For these reasons, it is highly likely that Postal Service financial results for 2002 and 2003 will differ from the amounts presented here.

The Presidio Trust is a wholly owned government corporation established by the Omnibus Parks and Public Lands Management Act of 1996 (Public Law 104-333) to manage, improve, maintain and lease property in the Presidio of San Francisco. After this former military base was transferred to the National Park Service (NPS), the Trust was created to take over responsibility for managing the hundreds of houses, office buildings, and other facilities in an innovative manner that uses private-sector resources, but is consistent with surrounding NPS lands. This appropriation funds the operation and capital improvements of the Trust.

All railroad retirees receive the equivalent of a social security benefit, and they may also receive other add-ons including rail industry pension payments, windfall payments, and supplemental annuities. Social security benefits for former railroad employees are funded by the social security trust funds, and rail industry pension payments are the responsibility of the rail sector.

Under current law, a financial interchange occurs once each year between the social security trust funds and the social security equivalent benefit (SSEB) account. The SSEB receives monthly advances from the general fund equal to an estimate of the transfer the SSEB would have received for the previous month if the financial interchange transfers were on a monthly basis. Advances from the previous year are repaid annually to the general fund immediately after the financial interchange is received. In 2001, $3,145 million was advanced and $3,001 million was repaid.

The Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act (FIRREA) of 1989 established the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) as a temporary agency to dispose of insolvent thrift institutions. The Savings Association Insurance Fund took over responsibility for resolving failed thrifts on July 1, 1995, and the RTC's assets and liabilities were transferred to the FSLIC Resolution Fund on December 31, 1995.

Of $18.3 billion appropriated to RTC in 1994 by the RTC Completion Act, the Thrift Depositor Protection Oversight Board determined that only $4.6 billion was required and the excess was returned to Treasury on December 31, 1997. When the RTC terminated, the Oversight Board's primary function ceased. On October 29, 1998, the Board was abolished and its remaining responsibility to oversee the Resolution Funding Corporation (REFCORP), which provided financing for the RTC, was transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The primary mission of the Securities and Exchange Commission (the Commission) is to administer and enforce the Federal securities laws in order to protect investors, and to maintain fair, honest, and efficient markets.

Full disclosure.—This program ensures that investors will be provided with material information in the public offering, trading, voting and tendering of securities. Standards of financial reporting are established and enforced to enhance the transparency, relevance, and reliability of financial reporting so that financial statements used by investors in making investment decisions are presented fairly and have credibility. Issuers that have conducted public offerings, have securities traded in the public markets, or have total assets and security holder populations of specified sizes, are required to furnish management, financial, and business information to investors and the Commission on a continuing basis in proxy materials and in annual and other periodic reports. The staff reviews these documents on a selected basis for compliance with the disclosure requirements. In addition, all registration statements of issuers that are making their initial public offerings of securities and all third party tender offer filings are reviewed by the staff. As a result of the review process, the staff may issue comments to issuers to elicit better compliance or, where appropriate, refer matters for enforcement action.

Electronic filing (EDGAR).—The Commission's EDGAR system provides the agency with the capability for electronic receipt, analysis, and dissemination of virtually all of its full disclosure filings. Since becoming operational in 1993, EDGAR has received and successfully processed and disseminated over 4.8 million documents submitted in approximately 1.8 million separate submissions from over 28,000 companies and funds registered with the SEC.

In order to take advantage of changes in technology, lower operational costs, integrate with other SEC systems, and respond to the demands of filers and investors, the SEC decided to modernize EDGAR. This multi-year modernization will conclude in early 2002. This modernization brings Internet technology, both hardware and software, to EDGAR, with such new features as: (1) a Filing Web Site (for filing, software distribution, and assistance), (2) a security infrastructure as secure as what is used today for Internet financial transactions across the world, (3) new data formats that promote readability of documents for multiple purposes, (4) new functionality as requested by our filing community, (5) an Enterprise Data Repository for centrally housing all SEC data, and (6) a new Public Dissemination System.

The SEC is now reviewing all of its remaining paper documents to determine the feasibility and cost/benefit of incorporating those into the electronic world of EDGAR.

Prevention and suppression of fraud.—This program investigates and prosecutes violations of the federal securities laws, including financial fraud, illegal distribution of unregistered securities, fraudulent offerings, insider trading, market manipulation, and illegal conduct by broker-dealers and investment advisers. Enforcement actions include emergency actions halting ongoing violations, injunctions against future violations, and disgorgement orders. Financial penalties and bars from acting in a regulated capacity may also be obtained. Over $3.0 billion in disgorgement and penalties has been collected in our actions since 1984. Because of the critical importance of criminal prosecutions as a deterrent to securities fraud, we refer cases to criminal authorities and detail staff to assist in criminal prosecutions.

Supervision and regulation of securities markets.—Trading in the securities markets is regulated to protect investors against fraud and manipulation and to ensure the maintenance of fair, orderly, efficient, and competitive markets. The Commission oversees the work of self-regulatory organizations, monitors securities markets and broker-dealer operations, and develops regulatory strategies for coping with market stress, promoting compliance, and meeting changing domestic and international conditions. The Commission also conducts examinations of broker-dealers and inspections of transfer agents, clearing agencies, and self-regulatory organizations.

Investment management regulation.—This program administers the Investment Company Act of 1940 and the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. Mutual funds and other investment companies manage over $6.7 trillion for more than 55 million households. The staff reviews disclosure documents filed by investment companies and investment advisers and regulates and inspects investment companies and investment advisers to protect investors against fraud, self-dealing, inadequate disclosure, and other abuse. The staff refers serious violations for enforcement action. This program also is responsible for administering the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935.

Legal and economic services.—This program provides a range of legal services and economic analyses to the Commission concerning its law enforcement, regulatory, and legislative activities, including: (i) prosecution of enforcement actions in appellate courts; (ii) representation of the Commission in all other appellate litigation, in private litigation where the Commission appears as amicus curiae, and in corporate reorganizations; (iii) representation of the Commission in actions brought against the Commission and its employees; (iv) preparation of Congressional testimony and comments and advice concerning proposed securities legislation; (v) advice to the Commission concerning issues arising from its law enforcement and regulatory activities; (vi) preparation of draft opinions of adjudicatory decisions and advice to the Commission regarding its adjudicatory decisions; (vii) advice to the Commission regarding compliance with Government-wide statutes and the statutes and rules applicable to the agency's activities; and (viii) economic analyses of proposed regulations and legislation, litigation support in enforcement cases, and independent studies of issues affecting the securities markets. In addition, the administrative law judges conduct hearings and issue initial decisions in formal administrative proceedings where the Commission has determined that hearings are appropriate in the public interest and for the protection of public investors.

Program direction.—This program assists the Commission in fulfilling its statutory requirements and in responding to changes in the securities industry by carefully evaluating priorities, formulating and implementing policies, and managing agency resources. The staff provides management direction and analysis, internal control, financial management, personnel management, data processing, public affairs, records management, information dissemination, general administrative services, and processing of equal employment opportunity complaints.

The Commission's fee schedule has been revised by the provisions of the "Investor and Capital Markets Fee Relief Act" (P.L. 107-123). This law amends fee language found in Section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933, Sections 13(e) 14(g) and 31 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and Section 307(b) of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939. Under this law, the Section 6(b) fee rate paid by corporations to register securities with the Commission will be reduced from $250 per $1 million in 2001 to $92 per $1 million. The Section 31 transaction fee rate will be reduced from $33.33 per $1 million to $15 per $1 million. The Section 14(g) fee for proxy solicitations and statements in corporate control transactions will be reduced from $200 per $1 million to $92 per $1 million. The Section 13(e) fee for stock repurchase statements will be reduced from $200 per $1 million to $92 per $1 million. The Trust Indenture Act fee will be eliminated. Henceforth, all Commission fees will be credited to offsetting collections, with no portion credited to general revenues. The new law requires that, in fiscal years 2003-11, the Commission adjust all applicable fee rates so that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of relevant activities for each fiscal year, the result will be aggregate fee collections equal to a target offsetting collection amounts projected for each fiscal year. The Commission shall adjust each rate to a uniform adjusted rate in fiscal years 2012 and after.

P.L. 107-123 also granted the Commission the authority to compensate its employees in amounts comparable to the salaries paid by the federal banking agencies, in order to help ameliorate the continued difficulties that the Commission has had in attracting and retaining sufficient numbers of qualified staff. The Commission expects to make the transition once it meets the procedural steps outlined in the Act and has the budget authority to compensate its staff at the higher levels. In the interim period, many Commission staff will continue to be paid pursuant to the General Schedule, while those eligible for the special pay rates approved by Office of Personnel Management ("OPM") in 2001 will continue to be paid according to their respective special pay scales.

The Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA) was created in 1933 as a Government-owned corporation for the unified development of a river basin comprised of parts of seven States. The agency finances its program primarily from proceeds available from current power operations and borrowings against future power revenues.

TVA's nonpower programs.—As a Federal corporation, TVA serves national interests by operating infrastructure services for the production of electricity, economic development and the stewardship of natural resources in 201 counties in seven States.

TVA has a statutory obligation to operate 54 dams and reservoirs to regulate stream-flow for the multi-purpose objectives of navigation, flood control, recreation and aquatic habitat conservation; perform cyclic maintenance and repair of 14 navigation locks, maintain dam machinery and spillway gates; perform channel, lock and mooring modifications to maintain safety and passability for increasingly larger cargo vessels; conserve and improve water quality and supply in 12 watersheds and dam tailwaters for fisheries and potable supply for 4 million people; control mosquitoes and plant pests; prevent shoreline erosion and manage residential development in riparian zones; plan for and manage 550,000 hectares (1.4 million acres) of land; provide services and education to watershed communities; operate public recreation areas; and, meet Federal regulatory law requirements. The Budget proposes that in 2003, these services be funded entirely by TVA's power revenues, user fees and sources other than appropriations.

TVA's Power Program.—TVA's role as the sole supplier of electric power to an area of 80,000 square miles in the seven Tennessee Valley States is being reviewed as the Nation considers ways to restructure the electric power industry. Income from power operations, net of interest charges and depreciation, and other operating expenses is estimated at $100,000,000 in 2003. Power generating facilities are financed from power proceeds and borrowings. The Budget reflects a number of important initiatives TVA is undertaken to prepare TVA for changes that are occurring in the electric power industry. The initiatives are designed to give TVA's customers better service, greater freedom of choice, and continued access to economical power. TVA will renegotiate its sales contracts with the municipal utilities and cooperatives it serves. It will work with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and the Department of Energy to improve the nation's transmission system. It will continue to work with independent power producers to tie into TVA's transmission network and thus give TVA customers a wider range of choice. It will revise its power pricing policies to encourage its power distributors to introduce pricing systems such as time-of-day pricing which encourage cost-effective energy conservation.

Financing.—Amounts estimated to become available in 2003 are to be derived from power revenues and receipts of $7,275 million.

Operating results and financial conditions.—Payments to the Treasury from power proceeds in 2003 are estimated at $48 million—$28 million as a dividend (return on the appropriation investment in the power program) and $20 million as a reduction in the appropriation investment in the power program. Outstanding borrowings for the power program are expected to decrease by $252 million during 2003.

Total assets are estimated to increase by $105 million during 2003. The estimate of liabilities at September 30, 2003, is $62 million more than the estimate at September 30, 2002. Total Government equity at September 30, 2003, is estimated to be $43 million greater than that at September 2002. This change includes the net income from power operations, less payments to the Treasury.

The 1992 Benefit Plan was established by the Coal Industry Retiree Health Benefit Act of 1992. It pays for health care of those miners who retired between July 21, 1992 and September 30, 1994, and their dependents, who are eligible for benefits under an employer plan and cease to be covered, usually because an employer is out of business. Plan trustees are appointed by the United Mine Workers of America and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, a coal industry bargaining group. The Plan is supported by signers of the 1988 labor agreement with the United Mine Workers of America.

The Vietnam Education Foundation Act of 2000 (Title II of Public Law 106-554) created the Vietnam Education Foundation to administer an international fellowship program under which Vietnamese nationals can undertake graduate and post-graduate level studies in the sciences (natural, physical, and environmental), mathematics, medicine, and technology, and American citizens can teach in these fields in appropriate Vietnamese institutions. The Act also authorized the establishment of the Vietnam Debt Repayment Fund, in which all payments (including interest payments) made by the Socialist Republic of Vietnam under the United States-Vietnam debt agreement shall be deposited as offsetting receipts. Beginning with 2002, and each subsequent year through 2018, $5 million of the amounts deposited into the fund (or accrued interest) each year shall be available to the Foundation.

This supplemental request would provide supplemental funding for Pell grants to support a $4,000 maximum award in 2002. The 2002 appropriations act created a serious fiscal problem by under-funding the Pell grant program. While the act mandated a Pell grant maximum award of $4,000, it failed to provide resources for the Pell grant program commensurate with the maximum award. The act provided only enough funding to pay for a maximum award of $3,600, creating a shortfall of nearly $1.3 billion. This supplemental request would fully fund the mandated maximum award for 2002.

GENERAL PROVISION

(Supplemental now requested, existing legislation)

Of the amounts made available in the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002, $1,276,000,000 is hereby canceled: Provided, That such amounts shall be derived from amounts appropriated for projects or activities that were not included in the President's Budget transmitted to Congress on April 9, 2001.

This provision would cancel funding for amounts appropriated for unrequested earmarks and low-priority programs in the 2002 appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. The 2002 appropriations act provided over $2 billion for programs and projects that were not requested by the Administration in the President's Budget, while under-funding the Pell grant program. The Administration will provide Congress with a listing of such programs and projects and expects that Congress will select from this list in enacting a cancellation of $1,276 million to offset the Pell grant shortfall.

AMENDMENTS TO AND REVISIONS IN BUDGET AUTHORITY FOR 2002

(Between the Transmittal of the 2002 and 2003 Budgets)

A statement of all amendments to or revisions in budget authority requested between transmittal of the 2002 Budget and the 2003 Budget is presented below. This statement is included in the budget in accordance with the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (31 U.S.C. 1105(d)).

The modifications to requests for 2002 budget authority that were made through the course of the past year took two forms:

- If the Congress had not yet acted on a pending request, the President sent amendments to the budget requests transmitted on April 9, 2001.

- If appropriations had been enacted, the President proposed either supplemental budget authority or rescission of enacted appropriations.

Amendments and requests for supplemental appropriations are printed in the documents of the House of Representatives that are identified on the following listing. The President's proposals for rescissions are included in special messages to the Congress under the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344). Both the special messages and monthly cumulative reports on the items covered by special messages are printed in the Federal Register.

ADVANCE APPROPRIATIONS, ADVANCE FUNDING, AND FORWARD FUNDING

I. An advance appropriation is one made to become available one fiscal year or more beyond the fiscal year for which the appropriation act is passed. Advance appropriations in fiscal year 2003 appropriations acts will become available for programs in 2004 or beyond. Since these appropriations are not available until after fiscal year 2003, the amounts will not be included in fiscal year 2003 budget totals, but will be reflected in the budget totals for the fiscal year for which they are requested.

The Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (31 U.S.C. 1105(a)(17)) requires inclusion in the budget of "information on estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year following the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted for grants, contracts, and other payments under each program for which there is an authorization of appropriations for that following fiscal year when the appropriations are authorized to be included in an appropriation law for the fiscal year before the fiscal year in which the appropriation is to be available for obligation." In fulfillment of this requirement, the table below lists those accounts authorized to receive, in fiscal year 2003, advance appropriations for fiscal year 2004 and beyond and cites the authorizing statute. Part A shows the amounts of advance appropriations included in the 2003 Budget. Part B shows the accounts for which 2003 or 2004 advance appropriations were provided but for which no new advance appropriations are requested.

Part C of the table completes OMB's statutory requirements by providing a listing of accounts for which advance appropriations are authorized but not requested in the 2003 Budget.

A. Accounts for which advance appropriations are included in the 2003 Budget:

- Department of Education (20 U.S.C. 1223 and 29 U.S.C. 703):
 - Education for the disadvantaged: $7,383 million for 2004
 - School improvement programs: $1,765 million for 2004
 - Special education: $5,072 million for 2004
 - Vocational and adult education: $791 million for 2004
- Department of Health and Human Services:
 - Grants to States for medicaid (42 U.S.C. 1396): $51,861 million for 2004
 - Payments to States for child support enforcement and family support programs (24 U.S.C. Ch. 9): $1,100 million for 2004
 - Payments to States for foster care and adoption assistance (P.L. 96-272): $1,746 million for 2004
- Children and families services program (42 U.S.C. 9834): $1,400 million for 2004
- Department of Housing and Urban Development:
 - Housing certificate fund (42 U.S.C. 1437f): $4,200 million for 2004
- Department of Labor:
 - Training and employment services (29 U.S.C. 2801 et seq.): $2,463 million for 2004

 - Supplemental security income program (42 U.S.C. 1381): $11,080 million for 2004

B. Accounts for which 2003 or 2004 advance appropriations were provided, but for which no new advance appropriations are requested:

- Department of Energy:
 - Elk Hills school lands fund (P.L. 104-106)

- Clean coal technology
- Corporation for Public Broadcasting (Communications Act of 1934)

C. Accounts authorized to receive advance appropriations but for which none were provided and none are requested in the 2003 Budget:

- Department of Agriculture:
 - Food program administration (42 U.S.C. 1752)
 - Child nutrition programs (42 U.S.C. 1752)
- Department of Education (20 U.S.C. 1223 and 29 U.S.C. 703):¹
 - Impact aid
 - Indian education
 - English language acquisition
 - American Printing House for the Blind
 - National Technical Institute for the Deaf
 - Gallaudet University
 - Rehabilitation services and disability research
 - Student financial assistance
 - Federal family education loans
 - Federal direct student loan program
 - Higher education
 - Higher education facilities loans
 - College housing and academic facilities loans
 - Howard University
 - Historically black college and university capital financing program
 - Education research, statistics, and assessment

¹These statutes erroneously refer to "advance funding." Since these statutes describe and clearly intend to provide advance appropriations, the affected accounts are listed here.

II. Advance funding is budget authority that is to be charged to the appropriation in the succeeding year but which authorizes obligations to be incurred in the last quarter of the fiscal year if necessary to meet higher than anticipated benefit payments in excess of the specific amount appropriated for the year. When such budget authority is used, an adjustment is made to increase the budget authority for the fiscal year in which it is used and to reduce the budget authority of the succeeding fiscal year. Essentially, this is a device for avoiding supplemental requests late in the fiscal year for certain programs, should the appropriations for the current year prove to be low. The table below lists those accounts for which advance funding authority is requested in the 2003 Budget.

- Department of Labor:
 - Special benefits
 - Federal unemployment benefits and allowances

III. Forward funding is budget authority that is made available for obligation beginning in the last quarter of the fiscal year for the financing of ongoing grant programs during the next succeeding fiscal year. The budget authority for such programs is included in the budget totals for the year in which it is appropriated. This device is often used for education programs, so that grants can be made on a school year basis. The language providing forward funding for education programs will specify that amounts appropriated, in most but not all cases, will not be available until some time into the year of the appropriation (e.g., July 1, 2003) and in most cases will specify that such amounts will remain available until the end of the succeeding fiscal year. In other cases (e.g., Federal Pell grants), the funds become available on October 1st but are not normally obligated until July 1st or later and are available for obligation for an additional year. The table below lists those accounts for which forward funding exists or is requested in whole or in part in the 2003 Budget.

Department of Education:

- Education for the disadvantaged
- School improvement programs
- Special education
- Vocational and adult education
- Student financial assistance
- Educational research, statistics, and assessment
- English language acquisition

Department of the Interior:

- Operation of Indian programs

In the training and employment area, forward funding for youth training grant programs provides appropriations for a program year that starts on April 1st of the fiscal year of the appropriation. Financing extends through June 30th of the following fiscal year. For most other training and employment programs, forward funding provides appropriations for a program year that starts on July 1st of the fiscal year of the appropriation. Financing extends through June 30th of the following fiscal year. Program years are authorized for training programs under the Workforce Investment Act and operation of the State Employment Service under section 6 of the Wagner-Peyser Act. The table below lists accounts for which forward funding is requested in the 2003 Budget.

Department of Labor:

- Training and employment services
- State unemployment insurance and employment service operations
- Veterans employment and training

FINANCING VEHICLES AND THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

This chapter contains descriptions of and data on financing vehicles and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve listed below.

- The Financing Corporation functions as a financing vehicle for the FSLIC Resolution Fund. It operates under the supervision and control of the Federal Housing Finance Board.
- The Resolution Funding Corporation provided financing for the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) and is subject to the general oversight and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System's transactions are not included in the budget because of its unique status in the conduct of monetary policy. The Board provides data on its administrative budget on a calendar year basis, which is included here for information. Its budget schedules and statements are not subject to review by the President.

FINANCING VEHICLES

FINANCING CORPORATION

The Financing Corporation (FICO) is a mixed-ownership government corporation, chartered by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board pursuant to the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation Recapitalization Act of 1987, as amended (the "Act"). FICO's sole purpose was to function as a financing vehicle for the FSLIC Resolution Fund, formerly the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC). FICO operates under the supervision and control of the Federal Housing Finance Board (the "Finance Board"). Pursuant to the Act, FICO was authorized to issue debentures, bonds and other obligations subject to limitations contained in the Act, the net proceeds of which were to be used solely to purchase capital certificates issued by the FSLIC Resolution Fund, or to refund any previously issued obligations. The Resolution Trust Corporation Refinancing, Restructuring, and Improvement Act of 1991 terminated the FICO's borrowing authority.

The Act provided formulas pursuant to which the Federal Home Loan Banks made capital contributions to FICO at the direction of the Finance Board for the purchase of FICO capital stock. FICO used the proceeds received from the sales of such capital stock to purchase non-interest bearing securities for deposit in a segregated account as required by the Act. The non-interest bearing securities held in the segregated account will be the primary source of repayment of the principal of the FICO obligations. Securities in the segregated account are kept separate from other FICO accounts and funds but are not specifically pledged as collateral for the payment of obligations. The primary source of payment of interest on the obligations is the receipt of assessments imposed on and collected from institutions' accounts which are insured by the Bank Insurance Fund (the "BIF") and the Savings Association Insurance Fund (the "SAIF").

RESOLUTION FUNDING CORPORATION

The Resolution Funding Corporation (the "REFCORP") is a mixed-ownership government corporation established by Title V of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA). The sole purpose of REFCORP was to provide financing for the Resolution Trust Corporation (the "RTC"). Pursuant to FIRREA, REFCORP was authorized to issue debentures, bonds, and other obligations, subject to limitations contained in the Act and regulations established by the Thrift Depositor Protection Oversight Board. The proceeds of the debt (less any discount, plus any premium, net of issuance cost) were used solely to purchase nonredeemable capital certificates of the RTC or to refund any previously issued obligations.

Until October 29, 1998, REFCORP was subject to the general oversight and direction of the Thrift Depositor Protection Oversight Board. At that time, the Oversight Board was abolished and its authority and duties were transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury. The day-to-day operations of REFCORP are under the management of a three-member Directorate comprised of the Director of the Office of Finance of the Federal Home Loan Banks and two members selected from among the presidents of the twelve Federal Home Loan Banks ("the FHLBanks"). Members of the Directorate serve without compensation, and REFCORP is not permitted to have any paid employees.

FIRREA, as amended, and the regulations adopted by the Thrift Depositor Protection Oversight Board and the Secretary of the Treasury provide formulas pursuant to which the Federal Home Loan Banks made capital contributions to REFCORP's Principal Fund and continue to make interest payments on outstanding REFCORP obligations. FIRREA also provides that the U.S. Treasury cover any interest shortfall. Funds designated for the Principal Funds were used to purchase zero-coupon bonds. The zero-coupon bonds will be held in the Principal Fund and are the primary source of repayment of the principal of the obligations at maturity.

The Federal Reserve System operates under the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913, as amended, and other acts of Congress.

Program.—To carry out its responsibilities under the Act, the Board determines general monetary, credit, and operating policies for the System as a whole and formulates the rules and regulations necessary to carry out the purposes of the Federal Reserve Act. The Board's principal duties consist of exerting an influence over credit conditions and supervising the Federal Reserve banks and member banks.

Financing.—Under the provisions of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act, the Board of Governors levies upon the Federal Reserve banks, in proportion to their capital and surplus, an assessment sufficient to pay its estimated expenses. The Board, under the Act, determines and prescribes the manner in which its obligations are incurred and its expenses paid. Funds derived from assessments are deposited in the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, and the Act provides that such funds "shall not be construed to be Government funds or appropriated moneys." No Government appropriation is required to support operations of the Board.

The information presented pertains to Board operations only. Expenditures made on behalf of the Federal Reserve banks for production, issuance, retirement, and shipment of Federal Reserve notes are not included, since they are reimbursed in full by the Federal Reserve banks.

GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED ENTERPRISES

This chapter contains descriptions of and data on the Government-sponsored enterprises listed below. These enterprises were established and chartered by the Federal Government for public policy purposes. They are not included in the Federal budget because they are private companies. However, because of their public purpose, detailed statements of financial operations and condition are presented, to the extent such information is available, on a basis that is as consistent as practicable with the basis for the budget data of Government agencies. These statements are not reviewed by the President; they are presented as submitted by the enterprises.

The Student Loan Marketing Association (Sallie Mae) was created as a shareholder-owned government sponsored enterprise (GSE) by the Education Amendments of 1972 to expand funds available for student loans by providing liquidity to lenders engaged in the Federal Family Education Loan Program (FFELP), formerly the guaranteed student loan program (GSLP). Sallie Mae was privatized in 1997 pursuant to the authority granted by the Student Loan Marketing Association Reorganization Act of 1996. The GSE is a wholly owned subsidiary of USA Education, Inc. and must wind down and be liquidated by September 30, 2008. Under legislation passed in 1998, if USA Education, Inc. affiliates with a depository institution, the GSE must wind down within two years (unless such period is extended by the Department of the Treasury).

The GSE provides liquidity through direct purchase of insured student loans from eligible lenders and through warehousing advances, which are loans to lenders secured by insured student loans, Government or agency securities, or other acceptable collateral. In capital shortage areas, the GSE is authorized, at the request of Federal officials, to make insured loans directly to students. The GSE is authorized to advance funds to State agencies that will provide loans to students. The GSE is also authorized to provide a secondary market for noninsured loans; to serve as a guarantee agency in support of loan availability at the request of the Secretary of Education; to purchase and underwrite student loan revenue bonds; to provide certain additional services as determined by its board of directors to be supportive of the credit needs of students generally; and to provide financing for academic facilities and equipment.

The GSE is authorized by the Health Professions Educational Assistance Act of 1976 to provide a secondary market for federally insured loans to graduate health professions students.

Generally, under the privatization legislation, the GSE cannot engage in any new business activities or acquire any additional program assets other than purchasing student loans and serving, at the request of the Secretary of Education, as a lender-of-last-resort. The GSE can continue to make warehousing advances under contractual commitments existing on August 7, 1997.

Operations.—The forecast data with respect to operations are based on certain general economic and specific FFELP loan volume assumptions and should not be relied upon as an official forecast of the corporation's future business.

The Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) is a federally-chartered, privately-owned company with a public mission to provide stability and to increase the liquidity of the residential mortgage market and to help increase the availability of mortgage credit to low- and moderate-income families and in underserved areas. In carrying out its mission, Fannie Mae engages primarily in two forms of business: investing in portfolios of residential mortgages and guaranteeing residential mortgage securities. As of September 30, 2001, Fannie Mae held a net mortgage portfolio totaling $687 billion and had net outstanding guaranteed mortgage-backed securities of $817 billion.

Through a federal charter, Congress has equipped Fannie Mae with certain attributes to help it carry out its public mission. These include an exemption from state and local taxes (except real property taxes), and an exemption of its debt and mortgage securities from Securities and Exchange Commission registration requirements. An additional advantage is that the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase and hold up to $2.25 billion of securities issued by Fannie Mae under terms and conditions and at prices determined by the Secretary to be appropriate. Securities guaranteed by Fannie Mae and debt issued by the company are solely the corporation's obligations and are not backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government. The common stock of the corporation is owned by the public, is fully transferable, and trades on the New York, Midwest, and Pacific stock exchanges.

Fannie Mae was established in 1938 to assist private markets in providing a steady supply of funds for housing. Fannie Mae was originally a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and was permitted to purchase only loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA). In 1954, Fannie Mae was restructured as a mixed ownership (part government, part private) corporation. Congress sold the government's remaining interest in Fannie Mae in 1968 and completed the transformation to private shareholder ownership in 1970. Using the proceeds from the sale of subordinated debentures, Fannie Mae paid the Treasury $216 million for the government's preferred stock, which was retired, and for the Treasury's interest in the corporation's earned surplus. As a result, the corporation was taken off the federal budget.

In 1992, Congress reaffirmed and clarified Fannie Mae's role in the housing finance system through charter act amendments included in the Federal Housing Enterprises Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992 ("The Act"). Fannie Mae's charter purposes, as amended by the Act, are: "to provide stability in the secondary market for residential mortgages; respond appropriately to the private capital market; provide ongoing assistance to the secondary market for residential mortgages (including activities relating to mortgages on housing for low- and moderate-income families involving a reasonable economic return that may be less than the return earned on other activities); and promote access to mortgage credit throughout the Nation (including central cities, rural areas, and underserved areas) by increasing the liquidity of mortgage investments and improving the distribution of investment capital for residential mortgage financing."

In December 1995, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) set affordable housing goals for 1996-1999 and established the requirements for counting mortgage purchases to low- and moderate-income families and families living in underserved areas with specific census tract and minority concentration requirements. Under the regulations, the low- and moderate-income goal is 42 percent; the geographically targeted goal is 24 percent and the special affordable housing goal is 14 percent. These goals were also in effect for 2000. Fannie Mae exceeded all of the housing goals in 2000 with low- and moderate-income purchases at 49 percent, geographically targeted purchases at 31 percent, and special affordable housing purchases at 19 percent.

In October 2000, HUD set new affordable housing goals for the period covering 2001 to 2003. The goals are 50 percent for the low- and moderate-income goal, 31 percent for the geographically targeted goal, and 20 percent for the special affordable housing goal.

The Act also established the Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight (OFHEO), an independent office within HUD, headed by a Director who reports directly to the Congress. OFHEO has statutory responsibility for ensuring that Fannie Mae is adequately capitalized and operating in a safe and sound manner. Included among the express statutory authorities of the Director is the authority to conduct examinations of the financial health of the company and to issue minimum and risk-based capital standards. The minimum capital requirements are computed from statutorily established ratios that are applied to the assets and off-balance sheet risks of Fannie Mae. The risk-based capital standard determines the amount of capital that Fannie Mae must hold to withstand the impact of simultaneous adverse credit and interest rate stresses over a 10-year period, plus an additional 30 percent to cover management and operations risk. Total capital (shareholder's equity plus allowance for loan losses) at the end of September 2001 was $23.8 billion. The company has continued to remain in compliance with applicable capital standards and has been deemed adequately capitalized by OFHEO since its first classification in June 1993.

For the four quarters ending September 2001, Fannie Mae earned $5.1 billion.

According to accounting practices for private corporations, the mortgages in the pools of loans supporting the mortgage-backed securities are considered to be owned by the holders of these securities. Consequently, on the books of the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), these mortgages are not considered assets and the securities outstanding are not considered liabilities. However, the concepts of the budget of the U.S. Government consider these mortgages and mortgage-backed securities to be assets and liabilities, respectively, of Fannie Mae. For the purposes of this document, therefore, they are presented as assets and liabilities in the accompanying schedules. On the schedule of Status of direct loans for mortgage-backed securities, the items labeled "New loans" and "Recoveries: Repayments and prepayments" are budgetary terms. However, from the Corporation's perspective, these items are "Amounts issued" and "Amounts passed through to the holders of securities", respectively.

The Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac), is a federally-chartered, shareholder-owned, private company with a public mission to provide stability and increase the liquidity of the residential mortgage market, and to help increase the availability of mortgage credit to low- and moderate-income families and in underserved areas. In carrying out its mission, Freddie Mac engages primarily in two forms of business: investing in portfolios of residential mortgages and guaranteeing residential mortgage securities. As of September 30, 2001, Freddie Mac held a net mortgage portfolio totaling $471 billion and had net outstanding guaranteed mortgage-backed securities of $636 billion.

Through a federal charter, Congress has equipped Freddie Mac with certain advantages over wholly private firms in carrying out these activities. These advantages include an exemption from state and local taxes (except real property taxes), and an exemption for their debt and mortgage securities from SEC filing registration requirements. An additional advantage is that the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase and hold up to $2.25 billion of securities issued by Freddie Mac under terms and conditions and at prices determined by the Secretary to be appropriate. Securities guaranteed by Freddie Mac and debt issued by the company are explicitly not backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government. The common stock of the corporation is owned by the public, is fully transferable, and trades on the New York and Pacific stock exchanges.

Freddie Mac was established in 1970 under the Emergency Home Finance Act. Congress chartered Freddie Mac to provide mortgage lenders with an organized national secondary market enabling them to manage their conventional mortgage portfolio more effectively and gain indirect access to a ready source of additional funds to meet new demands for mortgages. Freddie Mac serves as a conduit facilitating the flow of investment dollars from the capital markets to mortgage lenders, and ultimately, to homebuyers, increasing the amount of mortgage credit available and making it more affordable.

The Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA) significantly changed the corporate governance of Freddie Mac. The company's three member Board of Directors, which had corresponded with the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, was replaced with an eighteen member Board of Directors. Thirteen board members are elected annually by shareholders and five are annually appointed by the President of the United States. In addition, FIRREA converted Freddie Mac's 60 million shares of non-voting, senior participating preferred stock into voting common stock. As a result, the corporation was taken off the federal budget.

FIRREA also clarified Freddie Mac's role in the housing finance delivery system through amendments to its charter act. Specifically, FIRREA established Freddie Mac's public mission: "to provide stability in the secondary market for residential mortgages; respond appropriately to the private capital market; and provide ongoing assistance to the secondary market for residential mortgages (including activities relating to mortgages on housing for low- and moderate-income families involving a reasonable economic return that may be less than the return earned on other activities." The Federal Housing Enterprise Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992 ("The Act") added to Freddie Mac's public mission the promotion of "access to mortgage credit throughout the Nation (including central cities, rural areas, and underserved areas) by increasing the liquidity of mortgage investments and improving the distribution of investment capital for residential mortgage financing."

The Act also established affordable housing goals that are designed to improve the flow of mortgage funds to low- and moderate-income families and families in central cities, rural areas, and other underserved areas. In December 1995, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) affordable housing goals for 1996-1999 and established the requirements for counting mortgage purchases for meeting these goals. The goals provide that, of the total number of dwelling units financed by Freddie Mac's mortgage purchases, 42 percent meet the low- and moderate-income goal, 24 percent meet the geographically targeted goal, and 14 percent meet the special affordable goal. Additionally, within the special affordable goal was a multifamily mortgage purchase target for Freddie Mac of $1.0 billion. In an October 2000 rule, HUD applied the 1996-1999 goals to 2000 and established new goals for 2001-2003: 50 percent for the low- and moderate-income goal, 31 percent for the geographically targeted goal, 20 percent for the special affordable housing goal and a multifamily target for Freddie Mac of $2.1 billion.

Freddie Mac exceeded all of the housing goals in 2000 with low- and moderate-income purchases of 50 percent, geographically targeted purchases of 29 percent, special affordable purchases of 21 percent, and the multifamily portion of the special affordable purchases of $2.4 billion in qualifying multifamily mortgages.

The Act also enhanced the regulatory oversight of Freddie Mac by establishing the Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight (OFHEO), an independent office within HUD, headed by a Director appointed by the President. OFHEO is responsible for ensuring that Freddie Mac is adequately capitalized and operating in a safe and sound manner. Included among the express statutory authorities of the Director is the authority to conduct examinations of the financial health of the company and to issue minimum and risk-based capital standards. The minimum capital requirements are computed from statutorily established ratios that are applied to the assets and off-balance sheet risks of Freddie Mac. The risk-based capital standard determines the amount of capital that Freddie Mac must hold to withstand the impact of simultaneous adverse credit and interest rate stresses over a 10-year period, plus an additional amount to cover management and operations risk. OFHEO published risk-based capital standards in September 2001 that become fully enforceable in September 2002.

For the four quarters ending September 2001, Freddie Mac recorded net income of $3.4 billion.

The financial data contained in this material relating to future periods represent estimates that have been prepared specifically for inclusion in the President's budget. These data should not be viewed as an official forecast of the corporation's future position, nor should they be used as a basis for making financial or investment decisions relating to the corporation. The data have been developed on the basis of certain economic assumptions that are subject to periodic review and revision. Consequently, the estimates are subject to forecast error and actual results from future business operations are likely to differ from these data.

According to generally accepted accounting principles utilized by private corporations, the mortgages in the pools of loans supporting PCs are considered to be owned by the holder of these securities. Therefore, Freddie Mac does not show these mortgages as assets. However, the budget philosophy of the United States Government includes these mortgages and mortgages pass-through securities as assets and liabilities, respectively, of Freddie Mac. For the purpose of this document, therefore, they are presented as assets and liabilities in the accompanying schedules. On the Status of Direct Loans schedule for mortgage pass-through securities, the items labeled "Disbursements" and "Repayments" are budgetary terms. However, from Freddie Mac's perspective, these amounts represent "Sales of PCs" and "Amounts passed through to PC holders," respectively.

FARM CREDIT SYSTEM

The Farm Credit System is a government sponsored enterprise that provides privately financed credit to agricultural and rural communities. The major functional entities of the system are: (1) Agricultural Credit Bank (ACB), (2) Farm Credit Banks (FCB), and (3) direct lender associations. The history and specific functions of the bank entities are discussed after the presentation of financial schedules for each bank entity. As part of the Farm Credit System (FCS), these entities are regulated and examined by the Farm Credit Administration (FCA), an independent Federal agency. The administrative costs of FCA are financed by assessments of system institutions. System banks finance loans from sales of bonds to the public and their own capital funds. The system bonds issued by the banks are not guaranteed by the U.S. Government either as to principal or interest. The bonds are backed by an insurance fund, administered by the Farm Credit System Insurance Corporation (FCSIC), an independent Federal agency that collects insurance premiums from member banks to pay its administrative expenses and fund insurance reserves. All of the banks' current operating expenses are paid from their own income and do not require budgetary resources from the Federal Government. Limited Federal assistance is provided to support interest payments on special FCS Financial Assistance Corporation (FAC) debt obligations (see discussion of FAC elsewhere in this document).

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT BANK

CoBank, ACB is headquartered in Denver, Colorado and serves eligible cooperatives nationwide, and provides funding to Agricultural Credit Associations (ACAs) in one of its regions. CoBank, ACB is the only Agricultural Credit Bank in the Farm Credit System. An ACB operates under statutory authority that combines the authorities of a FCB and a Bank for Cooperatives (BC). In exercising its FCB authority, CoBank ACB's charter limits its lending to ACAs located in the region previously served by the Farm Credit Bank of Springfield. As an entity lending to Cooperatives, CoBank is independently chartered to provide credit and related services nationwide to eligible cooperatives primarily engaged in farm supply, grain, marketing and processing (including sugar and dairy). CoBank also makes loans to rural utilities, including telecommunications companies and it provides international loans for the financing of agricultural exports.

The Agricultural Credit Act of 1987 (1987 Act) required the Federal Land Banks (FLBs) and Federal Intermediate Credit Banks (FICBs) to merge into a Farm Credit Bank (FCB) in each of the 12 Farm Credit districts. The FCBs operate under statutory authority that combines the prior authorities of the FLB and the FICB. No merger occurred in the Jackson district in 1988 because the FLB was in receivership. Pursuant to section 410(e) of the 1987 Act, as amended by the Farm Credit Banks Safety and Soundness Act of 1992, the FICB of Jackson merged with the FCB of Columbia on October 1, 1993. Mergers and consolidations of FCBs across district lines, that began in 1992 continued through mid-1995. As a result of this restructuring activity, 6 FCBs headquartered in the following cities, remain: AgFirst FCB, Columbia, South Carolina; AgAmerica FCB, Sacramento, California; AgriBank FCB, St. Paul, Minnesota; FCB of Wichita, Wichita, Kansas; FCB of Texas, Austin, Texas; and Western FCB, Sacramento, California.

The FCBs serve as discount banks and as of October 1, 2001 provided funds to 21 Federal Land Credit Associations (FLCA), 13 Production Credit Associations (PCAs), and 81 Agricultural Credit Associations (ACAs). These direct lender associations, in turn, make short-term production loans (PCAs and ACAs) and long-term real estate loans (FLCAs and ACAs) to eligible farmers and ranchers. FCBs can also lend to local financing institutions, including commercial banks, as authorized by the Farm Credit Act of 1971, as amended.

All the capital stock of the FICB's, from organization in 1923 to December 31, 1956, was held by the U.S. Government. The 1956 Act provided a long-range plan for the eventual ownership of the credit banks by the production credit associations and the gradual retirement of the Government's investment in the banks. This retirement was accomplished in full on December 31, 1968. The last of the Government capital that had been invested in the FLB's was repaid in 1947.

FEDERAL AGRICULTURAL MORTGAGE CORPORATION
(FARMER MAC)

Farmer Mac is authorized under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 (the Act), as amended by the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987, to create a secondary market for agricultural real estate and rural home mortgages that meet minimum credit standards. The Farmer Mac title of the Act was amended by the 1990 farm bill to authorize Farmer Mac to purchase, pool, and securitize the guaranteed portions of farmer program, rural business and community development loans guaranteed by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). The Farmer Mac title was further amended in 1991 to clarify Farmer Mac's authority to issue debt obligations, provide for the establishment of minimum capital standards, and establish the Office of Secondary Market Oversight at the Farm Credit Administration (FCA) and expand the agency's rulemaking authority. Most recently, the Farm Credit System Reform Act of 1996 amended the Farmer Mac title to allow Farmer Mac to purchase loans directly from lenders and to issue and guarantee mortgage-backed securities without requiring that a minimum cash reserve or subordinated (first loss) interest be maintained by the lenders, poolers or investors as had been required under its original authority. The 1996 Act expanded FCA's regulatory authority to include provisions for establishing a conservatorship or receivership, if necessary, and provided for increased levels of core capital phased in over three years.

Farmer Mac operates through two programs, "Farmer Mac I," which involves mortgage loans secured by first liens on agricultural real estate or rural housing (qualified loans), and "Farmer Mac II," which involves guaranteed portions of USDA guaranteed loans. Farmer Mac operates by: (i) purchasing, or committing to purchase, newly originated or existing qualified loans or guaranteed portions from lenders; (ii) purchasing "AgVantage" bonds backed by qualified loans or guaranteed portions from lenders; and (iii) exchanging qualified loans or guaranteed portions for guaranteed securities. Loans purchased by Farmer Mac are aggregated into pools that back Farmer Mac guaranteed securities which are held by Farmer Mac or sold into the capital markets. Farmer Mac is intended to attract new capital for financing qualified loans and guaranteed portions, foster increased long-term, fixed-rate lending, and provide greater liquidity to agricultural and rural lenders.

Farmer Mac is governed by a 15 member Board of Directors. Ten Board members are elected by stockholders, including five by the Farm Credit System and five by commercial lenders. Five are appointed by the President, subject to Senate confirmation.

FINANCING

Financial support and funding for Farmer Mac's operations come from several sources: sale of common and preferred stock; issuance of debt obligations; gain on sale of guaranteed loan-backed securities; guarantee fees; and income from investments. Under procedures specified in the Act, Farmer Mac may issue obligations to the U.S. Treasury in a cumulative amount not to exceed $1.5 billion to fulfill its guarantee obligations.

As of September 30, 2001, Farmer Mac's total capital exceeded statutory requirements. In May of 2001 FCA published a final rule for risk based regulatory capital that allows for a one-year grace period before implementation. Therefore, as of May 2002, Farmer Mac must maintain risk-based regulatory capital as provided in FCA regulations.

Available funds of Farmer Mac are invested in U.S. agency securities or other high-grade commercial investments. No stock dividends are allowed under the Act until the Board determines that an adequate loss reserve has been funded to back Farmer Mac guarantees.

GUARANTEES

Farmer Mac provides a guarantee of timely payment of principal and interest on securities backed by qualified loans or pools of qualified loans. These securities are not guaranteed by the United States, and are not “government securities”.

Farmer Mac is subject to reporting requirements under securities laws and its guaranteed mortgage-backed securities are subject to registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the 1933 and 1934 Securities Acts.

REGULATION

Farmer Mac is federally regulated by the FCA’s Office of Secondary Market Oversight (OSMO). OSMO is responsible for the supervision, examination of and rulemaking for Farmer Mac.

The 12 Federal Home Loan Banks were chartered by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board under the authority of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act of 1932 (the Act). The FHLBanks are under the supervision of the Federal Housing Finance Board. The common mission of the FHLBanks is to facilitate the extension of credit through their members. To accomplish this mission, the FHLBanks make loans, called advances, and provide other credit products and services to their 7,897 member commercial banks, savings associations, insurance companies, and credit unions. Advances and letters of credit must be fully secured by eligible collateral and long-term advances may be made only for the purpose of providing funds for residential housing finance. However, “community financial institutions” may also use long-term advances to finance small businesses, small farms, and small agribusinesses. Additionally, specialized advance programs provide funds for community reinvestment and affordable housing programs. All regulated financial depositories and insurance companies engaged in residential housing finance are eligible for membership. Each FHLBank operates in a geographic district designated by the Board and together the FHLBanks cover all of the United States as well as the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

Advances outstanding on September 30, 2001 totaled approximately $467 billion, a net increase of approximately $37 billion from the September 30, 2000 level of $430 billion.

The principal source of funds for the lending operation is the sale of consolidated obligations to the public. On September 30, 2001, $611 billion of these obligations were outstanding. The consolidated obligations are not guaranteed by the U.S. Government as to principal or interest. Other sources of lendable funds include members’ deposits and capital. Deposits totaled $29 billion and total capital amounted to $33 billion as of September 30, 2001. Funds not immediately needed for advances to members are invested.

The capital stock of the Federal Home Loan Banks is owned entirely by the members. Initially the U.S. Government purchased stock of the banks in the amount of $125 million. The banks had repurchased the Government’s investment in full by mid-1951.

The operating expenses of the FHLBanks are paid from their own income and are not included in the budget of the United States. Included in these expenses are the assessments by the Finance Board to cover its administrative and other costs. The Finance Board’s budget and expenditures, however, are included in the budget of the United States.

The Act, as amended in 1989, requires each FHLBank to operate an Affordable Housing Program (AHP). Each FHLBank provides subsidies in the form of direct grants or below-market rate advances for members that use the funds for qualifying affordable housing projects. The FHLBank System sets aside for its AHPs the greater of $100 million annually or 10 percent of net income. The Act, as amended in 1999, also requires that the FHLBanks contribute 20 percent of net earnings annually to assist in the payment of interest on bonds issued by the Resolution Funding Corporation.

The forecast data for 2002 and 2003 contained in this material represents estimates and should not be construed as an official forecast of the FHLBanks System's future position.
